JACK MUNRO GETS A $20,000 STAKE

Pugilist, Miner, Mayor, and Soldier, Now an Author.
Jack Munro, the man who sprang into fame by knocking Champion Jim Jeffries down one day at Butte, Montana, during the height of the champion's career, has at last struck it rich. Munro, ex-miner, ex-prospecter, ex-mayor of Elk Lake, ex-soldier, struck it rich as an author. Can you imagine that—Jack Munro an author?
That's it! Munro enlisted with the famous Princess Pats and was with them through all the terrific fighting of the first year of the war. His shoulder was smashed by a Hun missile, and he was returned and discharged with a crippled right arm, and was given a job as messenger at the parliament buildings, and while tinkering around there commenced to write a book. Now, an author, Jack is a good prize fighter, but McClures of New York, heard about his literary efforts, sent a man to Elk Lake to see Munro and his MSS. It was rough and ready, but it was a gripping, red-blood story that promised Jack London style and force when it was licked into shape, so they offered Munro $20,000 for the rights. Munro seized it with alacrity, and now he and his faithful dog are in New York drawing a thousand a week for two weeks telling tales of the Princess Pats to expert writers, and when he gets through spilling to the dictagraph he tackles a lecture tour at $100 a day.
Great work—John Munro!
