Another of those sad accidents arisis rom the inflammable nature of ladies . The young lady was dressing to go to a party, her dress caught fire from a candle, and she was immediately enveloped in flames. Before these could be extinguished she was so much injured that she died a few hours afterwards.— Hay, per ton 12.00 to 12.00 Total rec. on General Acc he marvel is not so much that this acci nt occurred, but that such tragedies not of daily occurrence, Ladies' ening dresses are, it is known, made a rule of the most combustable mater ials, and what more likely than that late" should, in leaving their rooms, brush against a lighted candle and thus t fire to their clothing? It may be impossible to lay down a rule that tadies dresses should be made of incombustible materials, but it surely is not inpossible for ladies to adopt the fashion of using some kind of lamp or candlestick so constructed that accidents of this description may be avoided.
