"In the Day's News"

Few people know that Maj. Gen. Leonard Wood of the United States now mentioned as a likely candidate for the Republican presidential nomination next year was the son of a Cape Cod country doctor, who humbly drove his gig back and forth in the little village of Pocasset. After the death of his father Wood entered Harvard Medical School, where with tutoring and doing outside work he got through and paid his own way. Shortly afterwards, in 1885 he was appointed in assistant surgeon in the army. His success in the military field was meteoric in the speed in which he climbed to the top. In less than 12 years he rose from the post of surgeon to that of chief of staff of the army. He was first in command of the Rough Riders in the Spanish war and later was military governor of Cuba and a command in the Philippines. From 1910 to 1914 he was chief of staff. In later years Gen. Wood has held the command of one or another of the important departments of the army.

THE SPRING CLEANING IS DONE

The last curtain has been draped, and the last chintz cover put in place, and the very last picture hung back on the newly papered walls; everything shines that should shine. There's a whiff of cedar oil in the hall, and the fragrance of pot pourri in the closets—the spring cleaning is done, thank goodness!
Even the man of the house is beginning to believe that something besides a "magnificent desire" to scatter his pipes, prompted by the scrubbing and moving and polishing and papering. He is beginning to get on friendly terms with the parrots that perch on his bedroom walls, and he isn't quite so scathing about the rose colored draperies at his bedroom window. But he never will forgive the buff colored paper in his very own holiest of holies, he wants to know "why a man can't have a nice cheery red wall paper on his walls any more."

Sixteen years old is simply wild, (these are her own words) over the futurist chintz in her room, she says it has "atmosphere" and she would like SO much to have black sheets and a lamp with a greeny-blue shade.
It's easy to see that Roger is pleased with his room, he hasn't said a thing, but there has been a steady train all day, of fourteen year old coming to look at the new wing of his molded airship. Three and a half hours over the "cow with the crumpled horn," that tosses the dog that worried the cat! "Where is the cat?" he demands. And there is no cat on that fresco. The man who designed it, quite evidently had no little interrogation mark in his home or he would not have been so careless as to leave off the cat!

Come on summer, any time you like, we are all swept and ready to receive you.

DEMOCRACY VERSUS PROHIBITION

To The Editor: The controversy between Mr. J. McKay and Mr. E. D. Heist and others shows a lack of true democratic principles, dealing entirely with effects, and ignoring the cause, without which the matter cannot be settled.

In order to get at the foundation, we must realize that humanity is responsible for the use of everything in nature beneath it. Man is possessed of three planes of consciousness: Body, Spirit, Divinity, and the man governed only by the physical senses does not know anything about the two higher planes of consciousness. Hence only sees effects, and knows nothing of Spirit, the plane of causes.

Man is responsible for the production of all liquors, which is really the Soul of the vegetable kingdom, extracted and fermented to preserve it from decay, and must remain where man so orders. It cannot become other than a vegetable product, is not responsible for its use; hence cannot be evil or create evil.

Therefore man is entirely responsible for the use he makes of it, and he must be held responsible for any evil by its excessive use that may accrue.

Now let us see how it mixes with Democracy, of which we hear so much recently. The democracy we get is shallow and not substance as is apparent to any independent observer.

Essential Democracy guarantees to every human being the right to develop his or her personality under normal conditions; teaches each individual to govern the affections with moderation; guides and helps those who cannot; holds responsible every individual according to the development of the talents each person possesses. Teaches them they are immortal and will be held responsible on each plane of consciousness, as they develop.

Inscribed on the banner of Democracy is the "Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man." That individuals are in all stages of development from the babe to the adept. As it would fill a large volume to properly describe only the fundamental principles of democracy, I will trust to the intelligence of the reader to add to their state of discernment.

Let us see how true Democracy would treat the problem. The first consideration would be to find the status of the individual and apply the Law to each case. Surely the individual of low mentality would not be responsible equally with one of high mentality, who could govern the affections and realized that the abuse of any talent or affection must be fully met by the law of compensation. The latter class must also realize that their brothers beneath them have rights to respect and a reasonable degree of freedom given them to develop normally. The individual who cannot restrain his affections should be directed by those above them, with discretion and moderation. The babe at the mother's breast surely has a right to be properly fed and cared for and all its affections trained as it develops from stage to stage of growth. Nature has given it laws to manifest its desires and those desires should be promptly met. The child that is neglected and improperly cared for is sure to cause trouble in one way or other, and large numbers die through the ignorance of parents, who are responsible for their development. Simply by not attending to the wants of the babe at the proper time. The same principles apply to those who are only in the first stages of human evolution. If the affections demand spiritual liquors there is a cause, and it must be met by wise direction, not by Prohibition.

The analogy between the babe in physical form and the babe in human evolution is a fair one. Nature provides the nourishment for the babe by distilling its food through the mother, and should the mother provide a surplus, and allow the babe to consume more than it required with the result that it became. Would she in order to correct the trouble, withhold its food or would she use her judgment and not allow the babe more than sufficient for its health? The mother who would be so inhumane as to deprive her babe of its natural food would be a criminal and should be treated as such. What about the Prohibition who would deprive a fellow whose affections require its nourishment just as surely as the babe, and is it not just as surely a crime as with the mother?

Will Dr. Heist give a logical answer or apologize for his illogical deductions?

To my mind this is what true Democracy would do with the liquor question and it would go further. It would tell us that very many cases of drunkenness are caused by a violation of sexual laws in various ways.

If Sex Hygiene was taught in our schools and the subject was properly and seriously impressed on the minds of the young, there would not be such depraved drunkards and other dope fiends.

Dr. Heist tells us doctors regard Prohibition favorably. If they could dispense with their professional etiquette and advise the public on sex problems, it would go a long way to establish true Democracy.

Recent events in our city surely proves what I have pointed out. Instead of removing the cause, Prohibitionists are only adding fuel to the fire, as the man who should have his drink is not going to permit others to prescribe for him when he realizes the other fellow is using and abusing his affections in some other way and is permitted his freedom.

We hear much about Bolsheviki and their doings, but they are no worse than the man who deliberately attempts to force them to accept principles that deprives them of normal development.

If people would think as individuals and weigh the principles as a personal matter, there would not be the extreme agitators as prevalent. People are swayed by some person or persons who are, to say the least, fanatics on some subject and they do things they would not as persons acting for themselves.

Wilson Her.
