INTRODUCTION	1
§ 1. Definition of Christian Ethics	1
1. Ethics is one of the normal sciences , as seeking to define the Chief Good or End of life, which furnishes a norm or law for conduct	1
2. Christian Ethics approaches this problem from the Christian point of view. But this point of view is not arbitrary: it is rather a logical necessity. For the good of man carries thought necessarily to that universal good which is the cosmic end. Morality thus passes over into religion, and this movement of ethical thought is represented by Christian Ethics	3
§ 2. Relation of Christian Ethics to Moral Philosophy	9
Christian Ethics starts from the Christian ideal as a datum, while Moral Philosophy must find its ideal by philosophical inquiry. But this does not form an absolute differentiation. For—
1. The Christian ideal has also to be found by methods of inquiry essentially philosophical	9
2. The ideal reached by philosophical inquiry tends to an assimilation with the Christian	11
3. Both Christian Ethics and Moral Philosophy must indicate the application of their general ideal to the particular problems of practical life, and in doing so their methods are identical. For in all methods of research there is ultimately no appeal beyond reason	12
§ 3. Relation of Christian Ethics to Christian Dogmatics	15
This is indicated by the dependence, especially in moral life—
1. Of theory on practice	19
2. Of practice on theory	21
§ 4. Division of the Science —
It is here divided into four parts, treating of (1) the supreme Christian ideal; (2) that ideal in its subjective aspect; (3) that ideal in its objective aspect; (4) Methodology	22
