on Thursday same as sadden thunder from the clear international sky. Altready it has become the student of voluminous correspondence among the foreign offices of the Triple Alliance, and during the next few days probably will be made the most important incident in this dull season among the continental powers. The crucial question is: "Will France give Italy prompt satisfaction for this unprovoked alaughter of the Italian subjects?" Should France decline or even hesitate to do so she will be likely to find herself in serious complications with the peace triangle. The first mieleading reports sent out from French sources on Thursday night made the impression merely that a workingmen's riot of somewhat extraordinary seriousness had taken place. On Friday official despatches from other sources indicated that the Italians had not lifted a hand in provocation but had been killed off by the dozen merely on account of their nationality while the French authorities abstained from any strenuous effort to stop the massers.

shrough the German embasy in Rome copious reports of the affair, and instructed Count Munster, German Ambassador in Paris, to send to Berlin as soon as possible all ascertainable details as to the fight at Aigues-Mortes and the attitude of France towards Italy's demand for reparation. The general understanding is that the Emperor is preparing to stand behind Italy in her determination to obtain satisfaction from the French dovernment. The accounts of the massacre which have been telegraphed at length from Italian sources to the Berlin prees are quite different from the French despatches. The idea fostered by the French statement was that about 200 French workingmen and as many Italians, after mutual provosation, did some hot fighting, which resulted in the killing or wounding of the most belligerent combatants. In fact the Frenchmen numbered nearly 1,000, while there were but 150 Italians. About 400 of the Frenchmen were armed with revolvers or rifes.

Rob't Wright & Co.

men numbered nearly 1,000, while there were but 150 Italians. About 400 of the Frenchmen were armed with revolvers or rifes. They marched down to the salt works where the Italians were employed with the avowed intention of driving them out, if not worse.

For a short time the police made a pretense of protecting the Italians, but they were so half-hearted in their measures that the Italians became convinced that they must take care of themselves and hurried to a farmhouse near the works. The mob followed. The Italians barricaded the doors. The Frenchmen surrounded the house and held it in a state of siege for hours while shooting at every man who showed himself before a window. A company of police were present but exercised little influence on the mob because the officer in charge refused to let them fire on the attacking parties. Eventually the police advised the Italians to leave the house and fly for their lives to the town. The Italians accepted this advice. They broke in groups from the rear door and fought their way as best they could through the crowds of rioters, and ran for their lives across country or on the highways towards Algues-Mortes. This was the opportunity of the man-hunters. They started in pursuit unrestrained by the police, and beat down with clubs or shot the Italians wherever captured. The hunt was continued through the streets of the town. The Italians were beaten to death We are offering a special line of Linen Napkins full 3 size Housekeepers should see these Napkins as they are a ed through the streets of the

Growing Indignation,

ROME. Aug. 21.—The anti-French agitation spreads hourly. Demonstrative crowds paraded the streets last night shouting for the King and calling for revenge for the Aigues-Mortes massacre. The police were out in double force all the evening and prevented the crowds from becoming riotous. The bands played Italian and German anthems while the ople cheered them and sang. The excitement of the people is reflected by the newspapers. They are unanimous in demanding quick reparation from France, and in urging the Government to exact satisfaction for the Aigues Mortes affair promptly and determinedly. At the same time the people are exhorted to restrain their just indignation and await as calmly as possible the event of the Government's action.

Showing at the Fair.

Ohiologo, Aug. 21.—Saturday was Great Britain's day at the World's Fair. Before 8 o'clock there was a crush at the gates and it continued at intervals during the day. Canada, Australia, India, Ceylon, Trinidad, Cape Colony, British Guiana and 17 British societies took part in the parade and ceremonies. The demonstration opened at the lake front at the status of Columbus at 8,30 o'clock. Then a procession was formed, with Capt. Gordon, commandant of the British troops at the fair, as grand marshal. All the British troops were in line. The various English, societies were out in full force, and six coaches were filled with Royal and Colonial Commissioners and natives of Guiana and East Indies. After parading the principal precincis of the city the procession disbanded to form again at 3 o'clock in frons of the Victoria House. Theree the line moved to Festival Hall in the Fair grounds, where speeches, music and Prof. Tomlin's chorus of 1000 voices were heard.

Canajoharis, N.Y., Aug. 21.—The Hay Trade Journal notes a weaker tendency in its review of the hay market. Weish Miners Will Prevent Work in the Collieries—Military Called Out.

London, Aug. 21.—The situation in South Wales owing to the coal strike has not improved. The strikers made repeated attacks on the collieries on Saturday, and numbers of strikers, workers and police were injured in the conflict. The district was much excited. Great military and police precautions have been taken, and the seriousness of the situation can be judged by the fact that the coal owners have asked for 2,000 infantry and 1,000 cavalry to protect the collieries and the working colliers. Over 700 infantry have left Plymouth in trains for the Rhondda Valley, and 500 others will proceed at once. The desperate measures which the men are taking in order to coerce the coal owners were shown when a body of strikers endeavored to stop the work of the colliery which alone supplies the Pontypridd gas works, in order to put the town in darkness, while stones were found on the railway line which evidently had been placed there by the strikers. The district has the appearance of being in a state of siege.

Sentinels are stationed on the hill tops and round the collieries to aunounce the approach of the strikers to the troops. The police are guarding the collieries, of which less than 20 out of 204 are working. The working collieries are chiefly in the Ebbwvale district, and the strikers announce their intention of marching there 50,000 strong to stop them.

Riotous scenes are expected owing to a police, and best down with clubs of sales the Halians wherever captured. The humin was continued through the streets of the town. The Italians were beaten to death within a hundred yards of the police station. Two men were shot dead in front of the mayor's office.

Hardly a dozen of the 150 Italians are believed to have escaped injury, yet during all this not even a company of infantry was called out. Only after the slaughter was complete did the troops appear. From the roads and marshes between Aigues-Mortes and the farm-house and from the streets of the town 45 dead bodies of Italians have been collected. Sixty-five Italians, all severely and a few mortally wounded, have been taken to hospitals. Some 25 or 30 Italians are missing. Some of them are supposed to lided in the marshes or underbrush, others to have field the country. The intensity of the feeling excited at the court as well as throughout the empire by the narrative of these events is revealed in the bitter leaders of the German press. The consensus of opinion among German editors is that the massacre was the result of barborous French nativism and chaurinism. The plea of a workingmen's quarrel over Italian competition is dismissed as a worthless excuse by the German press, which professes to find the true reason of the French outbreak against the Italians in France's hatred of Italy as an ally of Germany.

Italy Much Incensed.

Rome, Ang. 21.—The anti-French agitation, started in consequence of the massacre of Italians at Aigues-Mortes, has gained ground rapidly since the first demonstrations were made yesterday morning. Late last evening a mob attacked the Santa Chiara seminary of French priests, tore down the escutcheons from the facade, trampled them under foot, smashed the windows, and tried to force the doors. Further damage was prevented by a strong force of police, who dispersed the mob and guarded the seminary until late last evening. A company of police are stationed at the French embassy, as the anti-French agitation.
