

Harold the Outlaw

—OR—
The Gauner of Skene.

CHAPTER I.

CHANGES AT MOUNT CARM—A TRIUMPHAL RETURN.

The next three days were passed by Lady Logan and M'Garry in a state of great mental disquietude. Every hour they expected the arrival of Harold or some one which they could no longer retain. Their ignorance of his movements and intentions kept them on the rack, and the continued absence of Gilmour increased their apprehension. Lady Logan felt no remorse for the game she had played—for the cruelty and wrong she had heaped on Harold—but the danger which he had incurred, as well as the downfall of her dearly cherished schemes, made her miserable enough. How she hated the youth who had been the object of her machinations, and had suffered so much at her hands! In the pervasiveness of her unreasoning and selfish rage she looked on him as the supplanter of her boy, and cursed him in her heart. But she feared as much as she hated, for the power had fallen into his hands, and, judging by herself, she doubted not that the spirit of retaliation had, in vindictive character, come with it. Oh, if Gilmour would only return, that the worst might be known!

On the morning this wish was gratified. Two hours before noon Gilmour and Allan M'Pherson were descried riding up the avenue on horses much jaded and fleeced with foam—not the fresh, high-spirited animals on which they departed ten days before, but a couple of rascals brought from the stables of Benachray. The state both of horses and riders showed that they had journeyed fast and far.

They leaped off the hall door, threw the reins to a groom who came forth at their appearance, and bounded up the steps into the hall, where stood a footman to receive them.

"Who's in the house, Walter?" asked Gilmour, eagerly and anxiously.

"No one, sir, but Mr. M'Garry."

"Only M'Garry? Not my—? I mean has no one been here since I left?"

"No Sir Gilmour."

"Nor any message?"

"Not to my knowledge, sir."

Gilmour turned to M'Pherson and drew a long breath, while both men gazed at each other and seemed immensely relieved.

The time occupied in this interrogation, short though it was, was too long for Lady Logan's impatience, and her voice was heard at the top of the staircase calling on Gilmour.

The latter bounded up, waving on Allan to follow him.

Mother and son met at the door of the library. Gilmour spoke not a word there, but led his mother to the far end, where he had obtained a glimpse of M'Garry, while Allan carefully closed the door and came after.

"We bring bad news—cursed bad news," said Gilmour, with bent and lowering brows.

"No, you don't," spoke up M'Garry.

"The news you bring has come before you."

"Before me!" echoed Gilmour, "how is that? Walter told me no one had been here."

"But Walter could not tell you that I had a visit from Adamson at my office a week ago."

"Ha! is it so? And he told you how curiously our enterprise had miscarried."

"Oh, Gilmour!" burst forth his mother with passionate vehemence, "what tempted you to engage in a scheme so desperate and dangerous? All is lost."

"Nay, things are not so bad as that. Harold has recovered his wife and child—that is the woman he pretends is his wife; but I look to you, M'Garry, to prevent him from proving it."

"Do you?" returned M'Garry, dryly. "Then you look for what I shan't do."

"Shan't do!" shouted Gilmour, in wrathful amazement. "Siddath, man, are you mad? It's our only chance, and you say you shan't do it."

"No, I shan't do it."

"Why?"

"Because it doesn't matter a fig to us whether she is his wife or not. Harold will soon be no longer an outlaw. Black Dick is dead, and his dying declaration of Harold's innocence and his own guilt is in the Sheriff's office."

"Damnation!" hoarsely uttered Gilmour, transfixed with much horror, and gazing first at M'Garry, then at his own mother.

"You see now it is as I said," remarked her ladyship. "All is lost."

Gilmour stamped on the floor till the room shook, and his heel sank into the hard wood; then, traversing the chamber with hasty strides, believing forth every oath and imprecation, cursing every one, his mother, M'Garry, and himself.

"We are both of us equally undone," remarked Allan M'Pherson, speaking for the first time and then addressing M'Garry.

"We are all equally undone," responded the lawyer, snappishly. "I know about the other business too. Your quarrel, Allan M'Pherson, with Dixon, has cost you Benachray and me the factorship."

"Stop it, M'Garry," said Allan, wrathfully. "I am not in a mood to stand non-sensical from you—namely your paltry factorship with my prospect of succession. You can make it up by poking your cunning, pettifogging nose elsewhere. But what can I do?"

"Work," suggested M'Garry, in a spiteful manner, for the other's contemptuous words galled him.

This was adding fuel to flame. The disappointed, deflated plotters, finding themselves discomfited, threw the blame on each other, and vented their chagrin in mutual recriminations, till the sound of their quarrel within drew quieter sounds without, also they would have heard carriage wheels on the gravel of the terrace, succeeded by footsteps traversing the hall and ascending the stairs. Of these things they were unconscious, and were only subdued by the opening of the library door, and the appearance of Harold and Walter Adamson.

Then followed silence and consternation. Flushed faces grew pale, rage gave place to fear, and the aspect of conscious guilted wrong-doers was manifested by one and all.

Harold stood within the room, silently and sternly surveying them. His glance passed from one to another with piercing intensity. But his expression was of calm and lofty indignation. It showed nothing of vulgar rage or triumph, still less of vindictive resolve. Notwithstanding the deep, the terrible wrong which he had suffered at their hands, his generous nature prompted him to forbearance, though not to reconciliation.

At length he opened his lips. "Words," he said, "are equally to be used and unused. I disdain to reproach or revile, but I am here to take those rights of which I have been so unjustly deprived. But while I forbear to exact retribution for the past, there can be no future intercourse between us. I shall respect the legal rights of my father's widow and his younger son. They shall receive all that they are by law entitled to, but there can be no intercourse between us. Lady Logan, I give you seven days to quit, with all that belongs to you, the mansion-house of Mount Carm. This day week I and my family come to take our abode here. Meanwhile Mr. Adamson remains as my representative, and I put full authority into his hands; M'Garry, you will hand over to him your books and accounts; the servants have received instructions to obey him and no one else. As for this stranger whom I see in the room, he must quit Mount Carm within the hour.

Having so spoken, with form towering erect, and an air and gesture of dignity and fixed determination, Harold's eagle eye again swept for a moment over the group, then he turned, and was gone, leaving them cowed, quelled, and dumb.

EPH'S COCOA—GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.—By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of our breakfast table with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctor's bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame. —Civil Service Gazette.—Sold only in packets labelled—"James Epps & Co. OPENING TO-DAY AT THE LION.

37 Cases

NEW GOODS

—AND AMONGST THEM—

5,000 pairs No. 1 Josephine French Kid Gloves

In all the newest shades and lovely tints for day and evening wear. Those Gloves are all warranted, having our name inside as a guarantee for their genuineness.

Black Lustres.

750 pieces, best make (the Lion brand) Black Lustres, made from Alpaca wool. The exclusive right to sell this unexcelled Lustre, central in ourselves, ranging in price from 25 to 60 cents. You will buy no lustre but these once you see them. To be had only at the Lion.

Black Silks.

80 pieces rich Glace and Gros Grain Silks, bought by our agent in France, during the great depression in the silk market. Every lady should see these silks. Such lovely goods and rare value unequalled anywhere.

Dress Goods.

733 pieces Plain and Fancy Dress Goods. A grand lot this—every style—a rare treat to look at. Amongst them, goods worth 37 cents, will all be sold—choose where you like—at TWELVE AND HALF CENTS. Still another cargo of these just celebrated Fancy Silks, in grey as well as other leading colors, now 37 cents. These goods are only to be found at the above price at the leading store, the Golden Lion.

Hosiery, &c., &c.

500 dozen fine finish Balbriggan Hose, sold elsewhere at 25 cents, but sold at the Lion at a York Shilling. New Lace Mitts, Lace Gloves, Lace Ties, Silk Ties. A full line in the leading shades of Costume Canaries, such as navy blue, new green, new brown. Costume Linen—a special class of goods—only 5 cents, worth 12.

Millinery.

In the Millinery, open 30 cases new Hats, Flowers and Feathers, and 75 rich sample Mantles, bought much under value, exquisite goods, and will be sold at very low figures. 1,000 pieces new Lace Curtains. 25 Boxes in the new shades of Ribbons.

The Reason Why!

The question is asked daily, How is it you are always so busy at the Lion, when all the other stores are doing little or nothing? We answer that it is our prices and immense stock having three times more goods than can be found elsewhere. Such a thing as cheap goods was never known in Guelph till our Mr. Williamson made them so. But how can you understand others so much as you do? We buy 10 to 1, we sell 10 to 1. We do a wholesale trade as well as a retail, consequently we are the only store in Guelph that can buy direct from the manufacturers, thereby giving a profit to our patrons. We sell at prices that others have to pay. We were raised amongst the British manufacturers, and know every place where the best value is to be obtained.

Tweeds.

Our stock in Tweeds is unequalled in Canada, having 1,500 pieces to show. Our own make of clothing in great variety. Every article warranted. By leaving your cash at the Lion you will always feel assured you have done the best for your own interest.

A CARD.

To my Friends, the Public.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN:

Having retired from the Furniture Trade, I take this opportunity of thanking you for the very generous support accorded me during the forty years I have been in business.

It gives me infinite pleasure to assure you that my success has been complete, and that I have every confidence in my successors, Messrs. Burr & Skinner, who have made the requisite arrangements for sustaining the famous reputation of the stone house with the chair on the roof.

I would therefore remind you that though I have retired altogether from the business, you will still find the same wonderfully cheap bargains in furniture at my old stand.

I will be thankful if all to whom I am indebted will render their accounts at once. I have placed my books in the hands of Messrs. Sweetman & Hazelton, and trust that they will meet with success in the collection of accounts.

Thanking you once again, I am, ladies and gentlemen,

Yours very truly,

JAMES HAZELTON.

P. S.—I have a number of Pianos and Organs, which I will dispose of at half-price, in order to clear out No. 78 Wyndham street, which is now to rent.
