The Evening Chit-Chat
By RUTH CAMERON

"I have always been excessively fond of driving," a woman who has just fulfilled her heart's desire by acquiring a horse said to me the other day, "and always had so pitifully little of it. Several of my wealthier neighbors used to have carriages, but they took each other a great deal, and somehow I didn't get more than two or three drives in a summer. So now that I have a team I am going to try very hard to take the people who are fond of driving and don't get much of it. And another thing—there are never going to be any empty seats in my carriage. For years I have sat on my piazza beautiful afternoons and seen carriage after carriage go by with one or two empty seats, and it just used to seem wicked to me when I wanted so much to ride. So my carriage is always going to have just as much happiness in it as there is room for, even if I have to call people 'out of the highways and byways to fill up.'"

Do you know I think my friend by that speech stamped herself as an eminently successful woman.

For whatever his financial standing, whatever his attainments or achievements, it seems to me that any person has a right to be called a success, who has been able to pluck from his own deprivations and sufferings and misfortunes such an eager desire to have things different for other people.

"Give to establish a free lodging house—not by a damn sight," stormed a rich old man to whom I had gone to ask for money for such a charity. "I guess people that haven't any place to sleep can do just what I did when I was a boy and came to town without a penny in my pocket—they can sleep in the park or wall the streets. Nobody gave me a free lodging or anything like it. I had to get out and hustle for a bed before I slept in it. I guess young people nowadays ain't changed so it'll hurt them to do the same."

He had plenty of money—that of cudgermudgeon—but he certainly wasn't living a successful life.

The lady across the way is always doing something for some young girl who has no mother. She has three girls of her own to sew for and yet this spring she found time to make a pretty graduating gown for a motherless little friend of her daughters.

"Weren't you splendid?" I enthused. "How did you happen to do it?"

"Why, didn't you know," she explained most matter-of-factly, "that my mother and father died when I was just a little mite, and I had about as forlorn and pinched and loveless a childhood as anyone could? So, of course, when I find any girl without a father or mother I do anything possibly can to make it different for her."

Which of these two is your attitude?

Which have you gotten from your deprivations and sufferings—bitterness and resentment or an eager desire to make it different for other people?

Yes, on reading that over I admit sounds very much as if I fancied were in a pulp.

But considering what day it is may be you'll excuse me.

STOMACH LIVER LUNGS

Each of the chief organs of the body is a link in the Chain of Life. A chain is no stronger than its weakest link, the body no stronger than its weakest organ. If there is weakness of stomach, liver or lungs, there is a weak link in the chain of life which may snap at any time. Often this so-called "weakness" is caused by lack of nutrition, the result of weakness or disease of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. Diseases and weaknesses of the stomach and its allied organs are cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. When the weak or diseased stomach is cured, diseases of other organs which seem remote from the stomach but which have their origin in a diseased condition of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition, are cured also.

The strong man has a strong stomach. Take the above recommended "Discovery" and you may have a strong stomach and a strong body.

GIVEN AWAY.—Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser, new revised Edition, is sent free on receipt of stamps to pay expense of mailing only. Send 31 one-cent stamps for the book in paper covers, or 50 stamps for the cloth-bound volume. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

Fads and Fashions.

Floating veils are worn.

Turbans are flat and broad.

Heavy embroidery is used on linens.

Net has even gone out of style for blouses.

Veils are endless in variety, color and design.

Many stunning gowns are seen of foulard and satin.

Natural colored ongee is as much in evidence as ever.

Whole petticoats of ribbon threaded net are charming for party use.

Burlap suiting is one of the fashionable new fabrics of the season.

The veiled effect of both embroidery and lace is pretty and unique.

Much lace and even malines is seen on some of the latest silk petticoats.

Tiny bows of narrow black velvet ribbon adorn many of the blouses of lingerie.

The newest belts are of Persian cloth, with patent leather buckles and trimming.

Square veils, with embroidered borders, are much in vogue and are very becoming.

The little dress with low neck and short skirt is to be de rigueur for the theatre.

White Japanese wash silks, finely striped in gray, are ideal for the separate blouse for travelling.

Garden frocks of sheerest mull or batiste are made over all-over embroidery or lace trimmed under robes.

Persian chiffon scarves with black marabou stripes and the corners finished with black tassels, are popular.

Great quantities of velvet are used on the latest hats, not only in facings but in the shape of huge flowers.

An effective leghorn hat has a crown of yellow roses and a cluster of the same flowers under the left brim.

Persian scarves are most effective bordered with marabou or ostrich feathers, or with bands of plain colored silk.

Crochet buttons and those of silk in metal colorings are foremost for use on heavy satins, moires, velvets and brocades.

Beadings are in demand not only for lingerie dresses but for dainty slips and petticoats to wear under lingerie gowns.

The small hat is gaining in strength among the leaders of fashion, and the milliners are inventing new shapes in it.

Jungle Hunting De Luxe.

The Duke of Connaught's recent big game expedition in East Africa affords an interesting example of the comfortable and even luxurious manner in which hunters can now journey through that country. The newspapers published in the Protectorate give the following details of the expedition.

The party included the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, Prince Arthur and Princess Patricia, with Captain Rivers Bulkeley (Scots Guards), equestrian, Captain Brakenbridge, R.A.M.C., and Miss Pelly, lady-in-waiting. Captain G. Riddell acted as manager of the Safari and hunter to the Duke of Connaught.

Sixteen pack mules and fifty donkeys furnished the food transport, depots being established in advance along the projected route, and ten trained riding ponies were kept on the marching and hunting line. Twenty-five sheep were taken to supply meat for the party, and these were supplemented by many kinds of antelope shot by the hunters, and small game, such as partridges, francolin and wild duck.

Fresh fish taken from the larger streams provided a welcome change of diet. The fish are of delicate flavor and several varieties of sweetmeats and tinned and bottled fruits also figured in the dietary. Products of the wilds had a place, as the following sample menu will show.

Soup—Buffalo tail.
Fish—Fried barbel.
Entrée—Mutton cutlets.
Joint—Roast guinea fowl.
Sweet—Stewed apples.
Cheese coffee.

Fresh milk supplied en route by five cows.

The Living Tent.

The most important part of the equipment was the living tents, which consisted of double fly Willesden canvas tents, with bathroom attached, and a ground sheet of similar material. The ground space was 15ft by 12 ft, being larger than tents of similar design usually carried, another feature being the height of the walls, which made for much greater comfort than the usual shape, with walls sloping almost to the ground.

A tent of this design was supplied to each member of the party. In addition, there was a large dining tent, with walls of a height of seven feet, capable of seating ten to fifteen people with ease.

Each living tent contained a canvas bath of wooden collapsible frame, a chair of collapsible design, and also a collapsible table, washstand and small hand looking-glass; and the camp beds, also folding, were on wooden stands with a green canvas stretcher, on which were laid mattresses of cork. All the equipment was so arranged as to pack into loads of not more than sixty pounds net. This being the standard carrying capacity of the caravan party.

Great quantities of rope for packing, and alum and naphthaline for curing and preserving trophies, were taken. A Berthon collapsible boat for crossing rivers or duck shooting on the lakes, was found very useful.

The Duke of Connaught usually shot with a magazine .350, and with this weapon made good practice. His Royal Highness also used a double-barrelled .450 for big game. The Duchess of Connaught had a small 256 Mannlicher, which he used on occasions.

The caravan was in many ways no more luxurious than other big game expeditions, but one feature was unusual—namely, the plates, drinking cups, and dishes, etc., which were not of aluminium or other metal as usual, but of strong plain china and glass.

Wales Place on the Royal Standard.

Consequent Changes in the Empire Would Cost About $15,000,000.

London, July 14.—The claim of Wales to heraldic representation on the Royal Standard has again cropped up at the outset of the reign of King George, as it did on the accession of King Edward.

The Prime Minister has now promised that the claim of Welsh members to have the Welsh Dragon emblazoned on the Royal Standard shall be laid before the King. The members are indifferent whether the dragon or the lion is adopted as the symbol of Wales, but it is pointed out that Welsh sentiment in recent times has favored the dragon.

It would appear, however, that the Welsh members have underestimated the magnitude of the change which they propose. The suggestion that, instead of England monopolizing two of the quarters of the Royal Standard, one should be given to Wales, sounds simple enough, but the act would entail consequent changes in the royal arms throughout the King's services, before which even the stoutest innovator might well pause.
