Fashions and Fads.

Collars and sleeve sections of ecru embroidered batiste are used on frocks of navy blue tulle.

The newest blouses of crepe de Chine feature full long peasant sleeves and scarf girdles.

Hand-embroidered blocks of black and colored silk are charming on a dress of white linen.

A plaited giraffe of narrow black velvet ribbon is used on a dress of primrose-colored georgette.

White linen blouses are strikingly embroidered in red, green and blue.

With metal thread outlines.

Quite a few evening gowns have adopted the low U-shape front line instead of the bateau contour.

A little French sweater has a "skirt" of black and white blocks, and a stand-up collar of the blocks.

The most fashionable materials include the challis patterns and calico print designs on crepe de chine.

A dress of French voile has bands of square mesh net in which bold patterns have been appliqued.

Bodices, panels, girdles, and insets show a tendency to adopt the lattice work of beads as adornment.

Coarse cream cotton printed in a Persian pattern is used for the vest, collar and cuffs of a suit of tan woolen.
