—Edward C. Watson, of Detroit, Mich., died recently, aged 76 years. Grip and heart failure were the cause of death. Mr. Watson was well known in this city, having been one of its first settlers. A wife and thirteen children, all living, composed his family. Mrs. Major, Clarence street, being the oldest daughter.

—A surprise party invaded the residence of Mr. R. R. Brown, 294 Hill street, Wednesday night. They captured the house and inmates and made themselves thoroughly "at home." Refreshments and general sociability were served out in large quantities, and a happy time spent until an early hour in the morning.

—At the last annual meeting of the Ontario Poultry Association held in Bowmanville it was unanimously resolved to appoint Thomas A. Browne, of London, as permanent secretary, and George G. McCormick, of London, as permanent treasurer of the association. Hitherto appointments have been made for the time being, and the method has proved unsatisfactory.

—A paragraph appeared in yesterday's paper clipped from an exchange, to the effect that Mr. Fred O'Neill of this city, the famous baseball catcher, was hopelessly ill. The statement was hardly correct. Mr. O'Neill, is in London now, and though not a well man, the doctors still retain hopes of his recovery. Mr. O'Neill's many friends here will be pleased to see him around again soon.

The committee further request that wherever possible arrangements should be made to reach Toronto in the afternoon, so that they may be in the Metropolitan Church on Monday night at 8 o'clock. The special feature of it, after the address of welcome by Toronto friends, and reply by Rev. A. C. Courtier, B.D., of this city, will be an address by Dr. Carman on "Young people's societies in their conformational relation to the church."

MEANS OR WAYS.

—A warning to the friends of Mr. Hyman is supplied by the experience of one of his committeemen who lives on Grey street. The other evening a man rushed down to the house of this committeeman, and said: "Mr. J. W. Little has sent down for your canvassers. I have to take it up your canvassers. The committeeman did not like the appearance of the visitor, and promptly informed him that he would take it up himself. He was surprised when he met Mr. Little, to discover that he had sent no such emissary, and there seemed to be no reason to suppose the dishonest expedient was doubt that in order to forward the interests of Mr. Hyman's opponent. No other explanation appears possible. Committeemen cannot be too careful.

FUNNY AND FIRST CLASS.

—Londoners will have an opportunity on Saturday night of witnessing one of the funniest, most popular and most entertaining musical extravaganzas—"Evangeline." The entire company, costumes and scenery used in its Boston Theatre success will be used here, and the same care and attention to detail that characterized its success there will be given here. Foremost in the cast are Sidie Stephens, as Gabriel, Miss Ruth Davenport as Evangeline, James S. Moffat as the Fisherman, George Schiller as Le Blanc, Richard Harlow as Catharine, Miss Estelle Clinton as Eunice, Harry West as Capt. Dietrich, E. S. Turner as Benedict, Bernard Reilly as the Policeman, Miles as Hans Wagner, and two score of other old favorites.

CANADIAN POULTRY AT THE WORLD'S FAIR.

—A deputation, consisting of Messrs. Allen Bogue, London (chairman), J. J. Mason, Bowmanville, Jos. Dilworth, Toronto, and W. H. Doll, Eglinton, representing the Poultry Association of Ontario, waited recently in relation to the advisability of the poultry interests of Ontario being represented at the World's Fair in Chicago next year. Mr. Dryden received the gentlemen in a cordial and friendly manner, and became much interested in the reasons assigned why the Government should lend their assistance to further this object and bring it to a successful issue. Before leaving, the delegates were very much pleased to receive a promise from the local gentleman to this effect, that the Ontario Government would take full charge of the poultry exhibit for the Columbian Exhibition, and he had no doubt but arrangements would be made that would be in every way satisfactory to all Provincial breeders.

A RATTLING MEETING.

Mr. Taylor's Fine Reception in the East End.

Addresses by a Workingman and a Farmer—A Marshall Man Speaks—His Candid Admission.

Mr. Geo. Taylor, the Independent candidate, had a splendid meeting in the East End Hall last night. The big place was filled with the electors of that part of the riding, and they were attentive, appreciative and enthusiastic.

Mr. Joseph Simmons was voted to the chair. He said Mr. Taylor's opponents had claimed that all the evidence was in at the election trial. This was not the case, as Mr. Marshall could have been unseated half a dozen times.

Mr. Taylor was given a warm reception upon rising. His opponents stated that as he was the candidate of no political organization he had no right to oppose Mr. Marshall. He thought by the support given him at the last election that in sentiment and feeling he had many in sympathy with his position and platform. (Cheers.) His Conservative friends in the city had waited on him and tried to drive him back into the old party lines on the Saturday before his election as mayor for the second term, and had told him that if he did not agree to their demands he would be a well man. The speaker told them that he would stand by his former position as an independent man. That was when he ran against Mr. Callard and he was elected. (Cheers.) Mr. Minihinnick was brought out by the Conservatives the year afterwards because they thought he (Mr. Taylor) was getting too far away from the party. A gentleman came down from Ottawa to urge Mr. Minihinnick's nomination and election; but without success. (Cheers.) The speaker said he favored free trade if it was obtainable the world over. (Cheers.) He would benefit the workingman and the farmer the country over. (Cheers.) Anything more than a revenue tariff in this country was not wanted. (Cheers.) The present tariff encouraged the establishment of big combines which could dictate to the people the prices they should pay. (Cheers.) Because he advocated the reduction of duty on sugar and other articles he was denounced as an annexationist. (Laughter.) Some of the duty had been since taken off and sugar made cheaper, and was anyone more of an annexationist now because of that? (Cheers.) Reciprocity could not hurt the farmers if, as it was claimed, the selling price was fixed in the foreign market. (Hear, hear.) Farmers could remember that some years ago, when the Buffalo market was easier of access, Americans were buying up our sheep and cattle by the hundreds in this country. (Cheers.) While wanting a liberal trade policy with the States, he would not favor discrimination against Great Britain. For fifteen or seventeen years he had been in the active pursuit of farming; yet some of his opponents sneered at him for calling himself a retired farmer. Incidentally he touched on the L. and P. S. R. and the car shops questions as affecting the people of East London more particularly. He had advocated the connection of the two questions in the Council, and although the Council then did not accept his views, they were now doing just as he had contended for by sending a deputation to Montreal to talk about the L. and P. S. R. with Mr. Sergeant. In concluding he said he would serve his constituents in Parliament as well as he had the citizens as mayor. (Cheers.)

Mr. A. Shebbottom, of London township, a former neighbor of Mr. Taylor's there, and a Conservative, made a short address. He had been at one of Mr. Marshall's meetings recently, and the chief topic seemed to be about Mr. Taylor's loyalty. (Laughter.) He was at a loss to know how they made out Mr. Taylor's disloyalty. As farmers they felt that the high protective tariff was prejudicial to the farmers' interests to some extent, and enabled others to make money at the farmers' expense. Sugar, salt and other commodities were higher in price than they ought to be. (Hear, hear.) When Mr. Taylor lived near him he was a model farmer. Personally he had nothing against Mr. Marshall, but Mr. Taylor's policy was preferable. He concluded the publication of anonymous letters in the press against Mr. Taylor. He knew the farmers were going to give Mr.

Taylor good support and elect him by a good majority. (Cheers.)

Mr. R. Dunn said he was a workingman, and had also been a Conservative, but was now a supporter of Mr. Taylor. He had made a good mayor in the city, and would do as well in Parliament. (Cheers.) Mr. Marshall had voted to take the duty off corn for use by brewers, and not grow sufficient for home use, and it was unfair to take the duty off for the brewers and not for the poor people and the farmers. (Cheers.) As a workingman he felt the present policy tended to destroy minor factories and build up big combines. He would like to ask any workingman if there was a better time in East London ten years ago than now. Then the Globe Works and the Ontario car shops were running, but they had been crushed out. (Hear, hear.) Mr. J. R. Minihinnick now had only five or six men employed. (Laughter.) A few years ago salt was 50 cents a barrel, and now it was over double that price just to benefit a combine. (Hear, hear.) "I am loyal to my country and will support the British flag so long as I can stand," said the speaker, "and I believe the Reform party is just as loyal as the Conservative party is. (Loud cheers.) George Taylor was mayor of London for three years, and is there a Conservative or Reformer who can point the finger of scorn at him? (Cheers.) Let us turn the man out who favors taxing the necessities of life. (Cheers.) You might as well send to Ottawa a machine wound up to vote whenever the party pressed the button as Mr. Marshall." (Cheers and laughter.) The speaker characterized W. W. Fitzgerald's attitude towards Mr. Taylor as unworthy of a brother Orangeman. "This is a man here who wants annexation?" (Cries of "No.") "Then why do they accuse the Reformers of disloyalty every time? Every Conservative and every Reformer with independent principle should come out and poll his vote—one vote; we don't want two—(loud laughter)—for George Taylor." (Cheers.)

The chairman said any friend of Mr. Marshall's was welcome to speak. Mr. H. N. T. Colquhoun took the platform and announced himself as a Conservative and a supporter of Mr. Marshall. Mr. Taylor, he said, denounced bonus giving and yet took credit for what he did to get the car-works here, the main principle of which was a bonus. Mr. Taylor had said that the Liverpool market fixed our prices; therefore, what advantage would farmers get from reciprocity? Neatness to the American market was the only advantage. (Hear, hear.) "It's a good one too."

The speaker said he had asked Mr. Taylor at the nomination which party he would support in case the present Government was in the majority, and he replied that he would support any good measure no matter what party it came from.

Voices—"That's a very fair answer."

Mr. C. contended that it was not a fair answer, but the audience seemed to disagree with him. The speaker said that Mr. Taylor had attacked his character at the nomination.

Mr. Dunn—Did you not attack Mr. Taylor's character?

Mr. Colquhoun—No.

Mr. Dunn—Yes, you did on the Hamilton road and in the streets. (Cheers.)

Mr. Colquhoun then let the cat out of the bag. "I had no enmity against Mr. Taylor," said he, "until he incurred it by depriving me and my family of water when he was a water commissioner."

A big laugh greeted this admission at Mr. Colquhoun's expense.

Voices—"Say, we came here to discuss the Government's policy, and not personal matters. (Cheers.)"

Continuing, Mr. Colquhoun denied that the N. P. had built up combines. A salt combine was started, but when the Government found it out the duty on salt was lowered. He wanted to know of any combine the present policy had built up.

Voices—"Sugar!" "What about Massey?"

Mr. Colquhoun—You talk about freetrade England, why there never was such a protectionist country until it was strong enough to hold its own against the world.

Voices—"What was it 1840?"

Second voice—Yes; and the laboring men got 50 cents a day.

The speaker went on to tell how the N. P. had stimulated boot and shoe manufacture in the city.

Voices—"Where is it now?"

Mr. Taylor asked that Mr. Colquhoun be given a fair hearing, though advising him to curtail his remarks.

Mr. Colquhoun did not say much more. He was replied to by Mr. Taylor, who explained the reason of Mr. Colquhoun's actions of the hospital trust and the water commissioners towards Mr. C. Those actions were in the interests of the city, and not of the individual.

The meeting broke up with cheers for the Queen and Mr. Taylor. Mr. Colquhoun was afterwards called by Mr. Taylor by a profane name by one of the latter's friends. A wordy war ensued for a time.
