London, Saturday, June 29.

Ireland's Decreasing Population. There is matter for serious thought with a tinge of real sadness, in the figures showing Ireland's steadily decreasing population.

Sixty years ago it was 8,196,597. Fifty years ago it was 6,574,287. Forty years ago it was 5,798,967. Thirty years ago it was 5,412,357. Twenty years ago it was 5,174,816. Ten years ago it was 4,704,730. Now it is 4,456,526.

That is, the population of Ireland is little more than half what it was 60 years ago. Each of the provinces, Leinster, Munster, Ulster and Connaught, shows a decrease.

Three counties show an increase, and thirty-one a decrease. The increases are Dublin, Down and Antrim. Seventeen cities and large towns show an increase, and nine a decrease. Belfast now has 348,876; ten years ago 273,114, a gain of 27.7 per cent. Dublin now has 286,328; ten years ago it had 269,716, showing a gain of 6.2 per cent.

According to religion, the people are classed as follows:

Roman Catholics	3,310,028
Protestant Episcopal	579,38
Presbyterians	443.494
Presbyterians	61 25
Methodists	9.500
Tawa	0,10
Ail others	. 56,70
No statement	1.91
	AND THE

The Methodists and Jews show the largest increase; the Methodists by 5,755, and the Jews 1,990. The decreases are large. The Roman Catholics have decreased 237,279, the Protestant Episcopalians by 20,718, and the Presbyterians by 1,480.

Statistics such as these show that all efforts of the British Government fail to retain the population in Ireland. Love Ireland as fervently as they may, the homes of the young Irishmen and Irishwomen, at least a large percentage of them, must be found abroad. In this view of it the London Express says: "It is sad for Ireland, but good for the Empire, which profits by the muscle and brain that are plentifully raised in Ireland only to be exported to more lucky lands."

Canada, during the last 40 or 50 years, has in this respect somewhat resembled Ireland. The young men of Canada, or a large percentage, found their homes in the United States. The Canadian seems to have satisfied himself in his new home. The Irishman to a greater or lesser extent has felt himself exiled, and felt that justice was not done to Ireland. It would appear as if more and more there would be reason for the sentiment expressed by Campbell, in the "Exile of

But while the young men of Canada, many of them at least, during the last half of the nineteenth century, have left Canada for the United States, the outlook for the future is different. It looks as if Canada would furnish all the opportunities her native population could desire, and homes for many millions more.

Consider the Horses.

During these dizzy days of downpouring sun, every owner or driver of a horse should procure a copy of "Black Beauty," and read it from cover to cover. One can scarcely realize the sufferings of city horses during the sweltering summer months. A horse is, of course, stronger than a man, but, nevertheless, he is often given work to do that is quite out of proportion to his strength. He is affected by the heat, too, in much the same way as a man. Never a summer passes but one hears of innumerable instances of horses dying in the streets overcome by the intense heat. The humane practice of placing sunts on the heads of their horses. adopted by many London drivers, is to be commended. When you are faint with the merciless heat, and dizzy with the burning glare of the pavements, remember your horse.

accomplished by the Lord's Day Alliance at its Hamilton convention; the vital necessity of the Sabbath to the workingman was made apparent. Without one day of rest during the week, life would indeed be a dreary, hopeless existence for the man who is the sweat of his brow. Apart entirely from the religious side of the question, there is a practical viewshould study it. Modern industrial conditions have caused a steady encroachment on the Sabbath, until in this first year of a new century there exists a grave danger that its importance will be lost sight of. It served no earthly purpose but to humor requires no great stretch of the ima- a fancy which the boys themselves gination to picture in the future a could not explain. No one but the great labor strike, not for increased wages, but for a weekly day of rest. Every class of society should be interested in preventing such a condition as would result from turning the Sabbath to labor, and ing-glass concealed about them. Still, none so much as those who toil their hands. It is possible that if the toiler were induced to work seven days in the week, he might finally awaken to a realization of the fact that he was doing so for a sixday wage. By all means, then, let there be most hearty co-operation between the labor unions and the Lord's Day Alliance. Both are working toward the same end.

We published a few notes the other day congratulating Buffalo and the directors of the exposition on their suc cess. Canada is to be congratulated,

We have always claimed to be "Canada First." We have no need to give Canada a second place.

Among the first objects that interest you on entering the art gallery are the busts of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Sir George Burton Chief Justice of Ontario, and Chief Justice Falconbridge, that of Sir George Burton being the best.

In the Canadian gallery the paintings hold their own beside any in the exposition. "The Bathers," by H. Blair Bruce, is one of the best of its kind there. The Indians looking at the first ship on Lake Eric is interesting, and "American Bison," by F. A. Verner, is genuinely artistic.

Nor is it in art alone that Canada stands well, but also in the display of fruit. It will be an eye-cpener to many who visit that exhibition, and who perhaps believe Canada a backward country, to find the best apples, and the varieties of fruits there displayed. Many are not aware of the grape-growing, peach-growing qualities of the Niagara Peninsula, and counties like Essex.

ucative, and will inform all who see it of the vast opportunities of the future. The natural desire of all Canadians is that the Dominion shall continue to hold her own in every direction. Exhibitions give opportunities for comparison; judged by that comparison, Canada is worthy of the pride of her sons.

A Western man wants the United States Government to buy up all the steam laundries. Very well, but let the matter rest till the weather changes. The bare thought of laundries suggests starched collars and

The Toronto Mail says: "Two weeks ago the Hon. J. R. Stratton announced. in London there was to be no bye-election there. Now a bye-election is to be held." When in London two weeks ago the Provincial Secretary was asked by an Advertiser reporter what would be done with regard to the resignation of Col. Leys. His reply was that he personally had no official knowledge of Col. Leys' resignation. He did not say there would be no bye-election. The Mail and Empire cannot help misrepresenting Liberal public men.

The Monkeys and the Mirrors

Out at the circus the other day a cage of diminutive monkeys, with queer, half human faces, attracted by their droll antics a great number of visitors. Someone in the crowd produced a small piece of looking-glass and passed it through the bars of the cage. It was instantly seized by the patriarch of the troop who, holding it firmly against the wall of the cage with his man-like hands, gazed long and earnestly at the reflection of his visage. The other monkeys crowded about him, jostling one another rudely in their eagerness to see themselves in the glass. There was, to the spectators, something indescribably ridiculous about the performance; the ludicrous solemnity of the monkeys' faces as they craned their necks to catch a glimpse of themselves set the crowd into roars of laughter. The keeper explained that all monkeys are extremely vain, and that they are particularly fond of looking at themselves in a mirror. A monkey who has obtained possession of fragment of looking-glass will spend whole hours sitting alone in a corne studying his own face. Then, having tired of the inactivity, he will hide the glass in a corner of the cage until the desire again comes upon him to examine

Well, are we not all monkeys to this extent? In the sweeping perspective of the universe our earth is but a small cage, and our antics upon it-viewed from a higher intellectual altitude than we have yet attained-would appear ridiculous in the extreme.

A great artist once painted a notable picture. In it appeared the head of a ing eyes and serene brow. In his extended hands he held a curious collection of tiny puppets, which he appeared to be examining with some curiosity. Among them were little, pompous-looking soldiers, with padded chests; cannon, no bigger than a small firecracker; broken swords, the size of a darning needle, and man, clear and noble, with calm, pity-fragments of diminutive banners. The painting was entitled, "The Man of the Future Examining the Things of the Past." In that picture you are made to feel toward the puppets in the hands of the serene-browed man precisely as the crowd at the circus felt toward the monkeys. They were so unutterably absurd.

All of us carry through life bits of looking-glass, hiding and guarding them diligently lest our fellows should take them from us. Kindly Robert Louis compelled to earn his daily bread by Stevenson, who only narrowly escaped being the "Man of the Future" living among the things of the present, found that out; but he was too charitable, too loving, to laugh at us. Rather, he adpoint from which every workingman mitted that he himself had his bit of looking-glass. When he was a lad in Scotland it became the fashion for the boys of the village to assemble on dark nights at a certain rendezvous, each with a closed dark lantern inside the breast of his jacket. These lanterns bearer of the lantern knew that it was wasting its light there within his jacket, and not one of the lads thought of exposing the light. The world is peopled by lantern-bearers and men and women with bits of lookit is a pleasant world, and if we hadn't our lantern or our looking-glass to think of we might be worse employed. The monkey at the circus did not worry about what the other monkeys were doing as long as his attention was occupied with the mirror.

A Manifest Destiny.

[Dr. Lyman Abbott.] I believe heartily and profoundly in manifest destiny; heartily and profoundly in a Providence that directs us in ways that we know not of. The destiny of no individual is determined by himself; the destiny of no nation is determined by the aggregate of human wills that make up the nation. "There is a destiny that shapes our ends, rough hew them how we will."

Municipal Hot Water Service.

[Philadelphia Record.] A decided innovation in the line of municipal ownership is soon to be launched at Goshen, Ind. Here the council proposes to furnish heat to its citizens in addition to water and light. The plan is to furnish hot water for heating purposes from the municipal waterworks plant. This system has been tested and found successful in London, and also to some extent by private companies in the United States, but never before has a municipality undertaken such a plan. Goshen is a typical municipal owner ship city already. It is nearly 25 years since she took her first steps in this direction, and she has gone far enough to feel certain that these prin-ciples are a good thing for any wellordered city of similar size. It is es-

No historian has appeared comparable to Hallam or Macaulay. No poet has appeared comparable to Shakespeare, Milton, Wordsworth, or Shelley. The highest points reached, perhaps, have been by jurists such as Story and orators such as Webster. It can hardly be said that any American, even Franklin, has greatly influenced the world's thought. The profound stirring of the national spirit by the struggle for the union failed to produce any of the literary fruits to which such national struggles have commonly given birth. It is in mechanical invention and in scientific discoveries immediately conducive to it that Americans have been su preme. The account of this is to be found certainly not in want of high intelligence; more probably in the comparative youthfulness of the nation, the general hastiness of its education, and its absorption in the material development of the continent and the pursuit of wealth. It does, howappear historically that greatness has generally come of the stocks, not of the civilized offsets.

"Just a Good Fellow."

[Chicago American.] 'A young man died, aged 36, after a career of drunkenness and other dissipation.

At his death his friends said "he was just a good fellow, and that tells his story."

How easy it is to gloss over disgraceful failure and self-indulgence with a meaningless phrase.

Without mentioning this unfortunate man's name, his career may be outlined as a warning to those whose soft sentimentality leads them to the manufacture of foolish epitaphs of the "just-a-good-fellow" order. This man was "just a good fellow," and he drank himself into his grave and broke his mother's heart.

He was "just a good fellow," but he disgraced the honorable name that his

He was "just a good fellow," but he threw away splendid chances to be of use in the world, and to do his duty.

unfortunate women.

He was "just a good fellow," but knowing himself to be a worthless drunkard, he married a respectable girl, the friend of his childhood, broke her heart, and drove her to despair. He was "just a good fellow," but the result of his father's life of industry was wasted on the lowest class of men and women.
