TERRIBLE EXPERIENCE.

A Passenger Describes the Wreck of the Islander.

of the Crew-Gov. Ross' Bereavement.

Vancouver, B. C., Aug. 19. - Samuel Jameson, one of the passengers, gra-phically described the scene of the disaster after he attempted to get on board a raft. He said: "I slipped down the rope and on to the raft. By this time the bow of the Islander was sinking, and the stern was up in the air with the propeller out of the water. Then the stern began to sink. I was hanging onto the outer edge of the raft, and some of the others may have been struck by the propeller. I was struck on the head by the side of the steamer as it glanced by, but was not bally hurt. The bruise mark is there yet. But I had a good hold and a deep breath and down I went. We were sucked a long way down. Then the air in the cabin was apparently released, for I was tossed to the surface quicker than I went down. The only damage I sustained was from a mouthful or two of salt water and bruises in the ribs and chest. As I was going down I could see the propeller above me. When I came up there were but two of our party left, another man and myself. By this time there were men all around us in the water. Most of them had life belts. Three more men not come up again. Then we gathered around and stray bits of conversa- of a sherbet. tion were ever and anon audible through the thick mantle of fog. I saw even men with life belts on who could not stand it. A man would be trying to hold up and clinging to a piece of wreckage, and suddenly he would duck his head. There would be two or three bubbles, and the body of the man would float away with a part of the back and a little bit of the life belt above water. Men died from exhaustion and the sheer rigor of the experience. This accounts for the fact that few of the passengers who were in the water even with life belts were saved.

CREW WERE BRAVE. hardier men, were many of them pick-ed up. He went to the Yukon as commissioner last spring. He married in 1886 Miss Barbara E. Mc-Kay, the lady now deceased. Commissioner Ross has a sister in London, Mrs. J. W. McIntosh, who recently received word from her brother that he was going to the coast to meet his wife, who had gone to join him in Dawson. Presumably, it was decided Mrs. Ross and family should not spend this winter in the Yukon, and she returned on the Islander. though the Victoria dispatch states that only one child and a nice were drowned with Mrs. Ross, the Globe's London correspondent says friends there fear she may have had several of her seven children with her, and that others may also have been drowned. The Chinese minister here is one of the least known of the diplomatic street" is concerned, but he is very the activity of women who have prepopular in the circles in which he viously spent their days over fancy lives, says a correspondent in Lon-don M. A. P. The fancy dress fete given at the legation in Avenue Hoche was one of the society events of the season. In the course of the evening the minister discussed the situation in China with a few friends.

"I am reminded," he said, "of one of the stories in a little collection of amusing tales and jokes called in our country 'Tcai Pao' (The Family Treasure), published in 1707, in the reign of Kang Chi. A certain man, who was reputed to have much wealth, was attacked one day by a robber, who cried out: 'Hand me over all your money or

I will kill you.' "Ts'ai Mi, for that was his name, refused to give the money, and thereupon the robber seized him and belabored him without mercy. 'Now,' he cried again at length,

THE NEW WOMAN GOLF HAS MADE

A Sport That Deserves the Credit of Developing a Fine Physique in the Gentler Sex.

-Pittsburg Dispatch.

[By Mrs. Charles Dennison.] There is a new sort of American woman-the woman whom golf has made -as different in form and grace and of them had life belts. Three more men came up to get on the raft, and someone told them not to climb on as it would drown us all. We told them to hold on to it, and they did. Finally, one man climbed on and the raft upset and we were all submerged again. The two were all submerged again. The two tia, the scent of heather in his nostrils, and brought back to America sticks and helped keep the raft affoat. the great Scotch game. Previous to Finally we got a heavy door, which that our girls and women were for the was buoyant, and other floating material, and had several men around us hanging on to the wreckage. By the short and shady walks, an occasional time we were relieved we had a couple game of tennis, dozing over crochet or of chairs and other light furniture and fancy work, a waltz or a quadrille or of chairs and other light furniture and managed to keep up. It took a very strong man to withstand the conditions that prevailed. There were men who simply had to give up after being but a minute or two in the icy water. You could not see any distance. There were others talking the strong managed to keep up. It took a very strong man to withstand the conditions that prevailed. There were managed to keep up. It took a very strong man to withstand the conditions that prevailed. There were managed to keep up. It took a very strong man to withstand the conditions that prevailed. There were men work, a waltz or a quadrille or progressive euchre at night; but now all this is changed, and we have, instead of the listless, unexercised young woman, a sturdy, brown and buoyant maid or matron, to whom a ten or twelve mile jaunt over the links is no the conditions. There were others talking more difficult a task than is the eating

NO MISTAKING HER. You cannot mistake this new woman this golf maid. You see her everywhere these days. She is the rule rather than the exception in the summer colony, and even right here in thrice-baked New York. As I look back a dozen years, let us say, and picture in my mind the drooning maid on the hotel piazza, with her George Eliot or Ouida on her lap, and recall that her most violent exercise was croquet or a drive in a phaeton, and as I see today in my fancy the girl coming toward of it.

Golf came in like a lamb—a masked fore it reaches you. It's as clean lamb, so to speak. Golf posed as a fad and fidled about as a luxury. Golf minced down the links with cupid for caddy, and drew in its train a limp, white-muslined lady from this veranda, and a slow-stepping, high-heeled girl from that croquet ground. And directly golf had them safe he tossed them up in a wonderful blanket and set them down rosy and graceful and breathless and stunning. At first the most wonderful thing was leaves little ashes in the last the golf girl's color. Her face grew place. All her life she had been wistful of crossing a room gracefully. Boarding school had done its best and accepted the check. Still she couldn't regard her walk as graceful.
