Halifax, Dec. 7. - A dispatch from Alexander Graham Bell at Baddeck announces that a successful ascent was made today of his flying machine Signet, on which he and the members of the Aerial Experiment Association have been working for several months, and on which Prof. Bell himself has been employed for

The machine went up without the motor, simply floating on the air. With it ascended Lieut. Thomas Selfridge, of the United States army. It had been at first proposed to use a sandbag, but so sure was Selfridge of the security of the machine that the man went up instead of the bag. The machine rose to a considerable height, and the ascent was quite successful. The motor has not yet been placed in the machine. This will be the next step, but it will probably not be till next spring. Lord John Russell, when on a visit
