Labor representatives have been hitherto paid through assessments on trades unions, and it was feared there would be less cohesion in the Labor party in Parliament if its members were financially independent of the labor organizations. But the Osborne judgment, delivered last year, made it illegal to use trade union funds for political purposes. The Laborites wish Parliament to recease the meeting will be better attended that winds for political purposes. The Laborites wish Parliament to reverse the judgment, but the Government decilines to pass a law compelling trades unionists to subscribe to party funds, and offers the present salary proposal.
