new her she was over 30, but no girl of 16 ne looking, but the attention she gave to atters of hygiene added to and preserved her auty. What did she do? I don't know her apertments; took long walks when she could; ate but little meat, much fruit and cereals whenever she could get them. Another thing she did which she tried without success to get me to do, she drank her coffee with out milk or cream, diluted with water.

The reason she took her coffee so was because her physicians told her it was healthing to drink it in this way. Whether the practice added to her personal charms or not I don't know. On the whole she was certainly repaid for her systematic habits, and as certainly there was nothing arduous about the performance of them. Nor was there anything bizarre about them, it seems to me, there is about the following account I read of a Chicago belle: "To keep the supplements of her figure she stands one hour daily, fifteen minutes at a time, with her hands on her hips before a long mirror, and bending her knees out from each other she sinks slowly down to the floors low as possible, then as slowly uprising, direction their utmost length, out or up, forward or back, until when she stands erect they are ready to be placed on her hips again.

"Each movement is repeated, every time a hittle accelerated, until at the end of thirteen minutes left in her quarter of an hour. When she plays a good dead of tennis she cuts down her exercising one-half." Of course, the beunestomed, whatever may be thought of it besides. It is easy to see her whole body thus receive good exercise, adding to the grace of her own form, heautifying her complexion, and making her stronger and healthier.

I take a gallant interest in the numerous shorthand and typewriting young women whom I see about in the offices of my various whom I see about in the offices of my various friends. At first, I confess, my conservative and old-fashioned notions were somewhat shocked by the innovation, and I feared that the employment of these vonus parsons would have a slightly hardening and coarsening effect upon them; but I am bound to say that, so far as I cas judge, this unhappy result has not followed. However, I still reserve my opinion until the experiment has been tried longer and on a larger scale. If the time ever-comes when an employer will be as free to scold at his female clerk and in the same terms as if she were a man, then this employment of women by men will be bad for them and for society in general. Possibly we shall never reach that stage. At present, I acknowledge, the young wenen appear very well. They are regarded, I observe, as privileged persons; they are humored, deferred to and indulged. This is just the kind of treatment which is good for women, and under it all the little graces of which they are capable bloom and donrish.

Tis evening and the dreamy chime
Of vesper bells falls on my ear.
In sad response my heart beats time:
A year to-day
They laid away
On distant shore my love so dear.

The joyous lark has gone to rest,
The sun's last glow fades on the sky.
So would I hush within my breast
The strains so low
Of long ago.
Caught from my love in days gone by.

Oh, vesper bells, so low, so sad,
Your troubled chime I cannot bear;
Those minor chords will drive me mad.
Hush, I implore!
Oh, seal no more
The dissonance of my despair!
