Curiously Worded Advertisements.

Curiously worded advertisements that are raising without remark are more common in the London papers. It would not do here, for we are in New York parlance. An English nobleman offered a prize the other day for the best collection of such advertisements and the following is the result: "A lady wishes to sell her piano, as she is going abroad in a strong iron frame." "For sale, a pulpit suitable for gentleman with strong lungs." "Wanted a boy to look after a horse of gentle disposition." "To let, two gentlemen's rooms, facing south, and enjoying the sun from 9 to 3 o'clock." "Lost, a gentleman by a train on Saturday, answering to the name of Brown, carried his neck and nose in a bag." "Lost, a boy named Wilkins, with curly hair, answers to the name of Jim." "Wanted, a boy to look after a horse of gentle disposition." "For sale, a pianoforte, the property of a gentleman, with a carved back, suitable for a dancing saloon." "Wanted, a boy to look after a horse of gentle disposition." "Lost, a gentleman, with a broad back and curly hair, answers to the name of Brown
