SINGULARLY ERRATIC.

THE summer and fall of 1869 promise to be long remembered on account of their peculiarity. Indeed, we might almost go back and include part of the previous year, for everyone will remember the remarkable character of last winter—the first part of it warm and bright as October generally is, and the succession of heavy snow storms which came on when spring was expected. That sage gentleman "the oldest inhabitant" affirms that he never saw in Canada so cool a summer as the one just closed. If the thermometer is consulted it will be found that we scarcely had a single really hot day! And most of the time the overcoat could be borne in the evening without any discomfort. So cool was the season that the crops ripened very slowly, and the harvest was consequently thrown unusually late. In some sections many feared the crops would scarcely be ready in time to get them all housed before the fall frosts came on, but others thought that, as the spring had been so late, and the ripening of the crops so slow, possibly the fall would be beautiful and extend far towards the close of the year. Strange to say, the remarkable character of 1869 continues, and October, usually so beautiful and enjoyable a month, with its bright sunny days, and gorgeous forest foliage, has witnessed several snow storms, and has been as cold and dreary as December usually is. Around the shores of Lake Huron in Ontario, in the neighbourhoods of Owen Sound, Kincardine and places further inland, there fell over a foot of snow fully three weeks ago! This singular phenomenon in October has been accompanied by severe frosts, and it is to be regretted that in many sections of Ontario these have done a great deal of damage. In many parts of that Province, the best portion of the apples, potatoes, turnips and carrots, had not been housed, and a great deal of damage has been inflicted. A large portion of the apple crop, to which we referred recently, has been
