

And cry, in upper C, your heart is bursting,
Lurking in gardens, show no sense of wrong,
For blood, and blood alone, all eager thirsting

And, if some little bird begins to sing,
With cruel, blazing eyes upon him spring.

But tell me cat, have you no sense of shame?
How do you dare, with manner meek
And soft and sly and sleek, into a decent room
to sneak,

Mong decent people, and to claim
To be respected? Do you quite forget
And do you never feel the least regret?

O hypocrite! I fain would scold you roundly;
But whats the use? I see you're sleeping soundly.
