

PEACE & SECURITY

THE UN AND THE MIDDLE EAST

Discredited and some would say decrepit, can the UN Security Council become a useful mechanism in the search for peace?

By Brian Urquhart

Robert Malcolmson

The American tendency to moralize questions of international relations has undermined the long-term security of the West.

Paul Létourneau

West Germany's debate about defence policy takes on renewed vigour with the possibility of a Soviet-American missile treaty.

Charles Doran

Canada's defence policy seeks to use the dispute with the US over the Arctic to drum up support for increased defence spending.

James Eayrs

The Defence White Paper looks pretty, but the commitment to build nuclear-powered submarines is unsound and unnecessary.

Also in this issue: