Table 39 arrays responses to the following question - "who do you see as having the greatest responsibility for helping Canadians adjust...to changes in the global economy?" These data indicate that Canadians are divided on who should be primarily responsible for adjustment, but the plurality (39%) believe it should be the federal government.

Regionally, support for federal responsibility is highest in the Prairies (45%), and lowest in Quebec (29%). Also, Quebec respondents are the most likely to believe that their provincial government (21%) should have primary responsibility.
