

University, willingly devoting his time and energy to the work of the many committees on which he was asked to serve.

In 1933 Colonel Molson himself wrote the preface for a volume, The Molson Family, privately published. He said:

"We live in an age when the possession of a distinguished ancestry brings little but an obligation to more than ordinary service; and those alone have any right to pride in their forbears who use the talents and the position which they have inherited for the good of their fellow-men."

These words epitomized the guiding principles of his life.

They are for him a perfect epitaph.
