

University, President Wheeler of the University of California, President Miers of the University of London, England, Sir William Mulock of the University of Toronto, and President Burwash, of Victoria College, Toronto. The most important of the reasons advanced in support of an urban site was that students living in the city have an opportunity, while at college, of coming in contact with business men and of seeing something of the way in which the business world is conducted. It has already been pointed out that the average student, attending a university situated in the city, rarely comes in contact with business men and, consequently, has no opportunity of acquiring any real insight into business matters.

The President of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, Henry S. Pritchett, has certainly had better opportunities than any other man in America for observing the conditions under which universities in the United States and in Canada have been established and are carrying out their work. He believes that "the university should possess dormitories so that its site may well be on the outskirts of a city." Those who agree with him in favouring a suburban site are President Judson, of the University of Chicago; Dr. Van Hise, who is the President of the University of Wisconsin; Dr. Westbrook, the Dean of the Faculty of Medicine in the University of Minnesota; Dr. Chas. W. Eliot, who was until recently the President of Harvard University; L. H. Bailey, the Director of the New York State College of Agriculture; Dr. M. E. Sadler, of the University of Manchester; Dr. J. G. Foster, the Provost of the University College in the University of London, England; Alfred Mosely, the well-known English Educationalist; Professor Dale, who is in charge of the Department of Education at McGill University; and Dr. W. H. Gaskell, of Cambridge University.

Among those who believe that a university supported by a Canadian Province will derive most benefit from a rural site are Dr. Clark Murray, of McGill University; President D. Starr
