the question. Mr. Robinette's Appeal. Mr. Robinette spoke for an hour and a half. In his address he compared the record of Caulfield, upon whom the Crown rested its case, and the prisoner. Howland had not a black mark against him on the books of the Toronto Rail-way Co., while Caulfield had been reseveral times for missing his ported several times for missing his cars. On one occasion the car starter had refused to allow Caulfield to take his car out. Caulfield had a motive in getting evidence against the conductor. He was employed at the rate of $2 per day to work up the case, and if he did not succeed in obtaining the right kind of evidence he would not have been kept evidence he would not have been kept. Caulfield's work was like that of a whiskey informer, who practised deception. Mr. Robinette then dealt with the various counts in the indictment, and closed with a strong appeal to the jury to acquit the prisoner.

Crown Attorney Dewart's address consumed less than an hour. He asked the jury to weigh carefully the evidence of Caulfield, whose testimony was corroborated in important particulars by the finding of the "digger" in prisoner's possession and the detached tickets in his room. Caulfield, he pointed out, had not sufficient interest in the outcome of the case to induce him to get into the witness box and deliberately perjure himsel. He was paid by the day for his work, whether he secured convictions or not.

Judge McDougall's charge was looked upon as a fair presentation of the case, and at the conclusion Mr. Robinette did not have to take exception to any part of it, as he did in the case of Louis D. Bailey.

In the Non-Jury Assizes on Wednesday the Slater Shoe Co. of Montreal sought an injunction to restrain F. C.
