LUMBER CUT DECREASES.
The lumber cut of the United States in 1920 was 33,798,000,000 feet in 1920—Price Up 50 Per Cent in Decade.

The lumber cut of the United States in 1920 was 33,798,000,000 feet in 1920—Price Up 50 Per Cent in Decade.

The average price of lumber at the mill increased to $38.42 a thousand, which is a rise of 150 per cent, since 1910. The aggregate value of the cut is $1,299,000,000. There are the highest figures ever recorded, and the cut indicates present conditions. They merely reflect the extremely high peak in the lumber market of the past year.

These are the principal statistics obtained by the Forest Service of the United States Department of Agriculture in its 1920 canvass of American sawmills. They are based on reports from 15,978 active mills out of 23,233 estimated to have been in operation.

The figures show that the States which increased their cut are all in the Pacific Coast group and the Rocky Mountain group. The increase in the usual, Oregon attains second place for the first time, displacing Louisiana from position held last year.

California takes rank among the first five, displacing another Southern yellow pine State.

In 1920 the Pacific and Rocky Mountain groups of States combined produced 35.5 per cent of the cut. The eight States of the Southern pine group produced 34 per cent, while all of the rest of the United States produced 30.4 per cent.

The combined production of Douglas fir and Western yellow pine, which in 1920 was less than 60 per cent of the amount of Southern yellow pine cut, in 1920 became 88 per cent. This relative increase in the Western species arises in part from the decrease in Southern pine production, which amounted to 15 per cent. The conditions reported by Southern operators, arising directly or indirectly from the World War, were so adverse that the Southern pine may be expected to recover part of the lost ground in the next few years. But the indications of the statistics are that the supremacy in lumber production held by the Southern pine States has passed the zenith and is moving to the West.
