> To E. V. Bedwell, K. C., witness said that after her brother's death she looked after the place. Her sons did some clearing on it at various times. She did not know that there was coal on the property at that time. The present company was mining on the property under an agreement with her, which was in the bank at Nanaimo. Some evidence of the work done on the place by her brother was apparent to-day Grandam was unmarried. The earliest collection she had of coal on her pro perty was 21 years ago, when she sold the coal to Robert Dunsmuir. Grandam's property was about a mile and a half from her place. He lived almost continuously on the place from the time he settled there until his death. The first cabin was built on the property about 32 years ago, and two other dwellings, which were rented by Grandam, were built after that.

> Charles Fiddick, son of the last vitness, said he was ten years old when Mr. Grandam took up the land in question, which was within his memory.
