BABY'S SOLILOQUY

CAGED BY A TIGER.

A lt seemed madness to hope for escape, and yet we plunged desperately on. There were no rock crannies in which to hide—no trees large enough to climb.

A furious roar woke the jungle echoes. It seemed at our very backs. "God help us!" cried Lucius. I shivered, and nearly fell. He took my arm and dragged me along. Again an awful roar that made the ground tremble.

But just when a horrible death seemed imminent we staggered into a bit of cleared space amid the jungle, and here the scant light revealed the proportions of an iron cage, about 8 feet square! We gained the strange object by a dizzy rush, and Lucius jerked open the sliding door. I remember falling inside in a heap and hearing the clang of iron as the door shot fast. And then came a moment of agony. With a stupendous roar a great tiger launched himself against the cage, and clawed in madness at the bars until they rattled and creaked. Again and again the huge paws dabbed at us.

Lucius had dragged me to the very centre of the cage. There we crouched and shivered, while the beast spat and hissed and roared.

Finally he drew back and prowled around the cage, peering in at us every In its long course from Calcutta to Peshawar the great Peninsular Railway of India has innumerable offshoots and branches. With one of these I made personal acquaintance in a manner which I shall long remember. It happened in this wise:

I was going to Cawapore, and when I reached Patna I learned that the wreck of a goods train a few miles ahead had effectively checked passenger traffic. Twelve hours was the utmost limit of delay, according to the railroad officials; but I knew that this would safely be doubled.

but I knew that this would safely be doubled.

Palma was a dreary looking place on the lower side of the Ganges, and a detention there of a whole day was not a pleasant prospect. But there was no help for it, so I put my luggage in the station master's care, and started out for a stroll in the cool of the morning.

In a tobacco seller's bazaar, where I stopped for a cheroot, I was delighted and amazed to find an old friend. I had last seen Luctus Robinson in England. Now, he told me, he was a Captain of the Third Bengal Cavalry, and was in cantonment at Gya. An earnest invitation to be his guest for a few days, and the promise of good sport, quickly settled my plans. Lucius disposed of the business that hat brought him to Patna, and before midday we were traveling southward 60 miles through the province of Bengal on the branch line that led to Gya. Lucius nad uragged me to take very centre of the cage. There we crouched and shivered, while the beast spat and shivered, while the beast spat and shissed and roared.

Finally he drew back and prowled around the cage, peering in at us every few steps.

We plucked up courage and examined our shelter. The result was not encouraging. The cage was very old and rusty.

9 bars were thin. It seemed to be "ely hanging together.

The Rajaah that brought this here twelve years ago," said Lucius, "I have heard about. It was his favorite way of thilling tigers. He would draw them to this spot by tying a goat on the edge of the jungle, and then shoot them through the bars. I don't suppose he has used it, though, for half a dozen years, and it is rusting and falling to pieces. But as long as the tiger is content to simply prowl about and keep watch we are safe; otherwise.—"A shrug of the shoulders completed the sentence, and I knew what he meant.

Written words fail me when I try to describe the horrors of that night. The minutes seemed hours; the hours days. At times, when the tiger assailed us on one side, we were compelled to rush ada as mall pocket knife. This was our only weapon.

At last a glimmer of dawn streaked the jungle. This seemed to spur the tiger to a final effort. Without warning he leapt against the trop. He glared down at us with open mouth and glared furiously. His two fore paws revolved about our heads.

Crack! Crack! The was our only weapon.

we could feel his hot, steaming breath on our cheeks.

In desperation Lucius whipped out his pocketknife, opened the largest blade, and struck at the creature's paw and drew blood. The roar that followed drove us to the furthest corner of the cage. There we trembled for a moment, while the struggling tiger slipped deeper and deeper between the broken bars.

morning at daybreak, accompanied by a native driver, and by my host's favorite shiftaree.

For half a dozen miles we bowled over shady and well kept roads in a stylish English dog cart. Then the surried wall of the jungle called a halt.

Leaving the driver and the team, Lucius and I plunged into the jungle at the heals of the shiftaree, whose name was Pandu. He served as guide and gun bearer. Each of us carried a haversack of lunch. We found the ruins and spent several hours in admiration of their beauties. Then, after lunch, we were tempted to pughe on to some more ruins a couple_of miles distant. On the way the spoor of a huge serpent led us a futile chase, as did also the tracks of a panther. Pandu protested in vain against our carelessness. When late in the afternoon we found ourselves in a fearfully tangled jungle and many miles from our cart and driver, we were ready to admit our folly.

"There very plenty here. Sahiba," said Pandu, "all sleep now. When dark they creep out."

"That's a pleasant prospect," Lucius mutterel to me "The fellow is right though. This is where the Rajah bags most of his big game. I didn't think we had come so far. We must get clear of the jungle before sunset."

We relieved Pandu of our heavy bore rifies and started briskly back. For a time the dense undergrowth made a single file a necessity. Then we struck a patch of marshy ground. It was comparatively open, and Lucius and I spread out to the right and left of Pandu aswe tramped saggily forward of through rustling weeds that came above our shoulders. These suddenly fell away and we emerged on the brink of a glassy pool of water.

As we instinctively halted, we heard a low turious grow! Glancing to the mad deeper between the broken bars.
Suddenly Lucius caught my arm in a fierce grip.

"The beest is stuck!" he cried. "On't you see! Now is our chance. Come on."

We crept to the door and slid it open, and banged it shut behind us as we darked out and eped away across the clearing. Rose upon roar rang in our ears, and we heard the rattle of bars, and then a heavy cressb, and knew very well that the liberated tiger had crept to the ground. At that moment all hope seemed gone, and yet our deliverance was even then at hand.

As we floundered into the jungle we saw flashing lights just ahead, and a circle of familiar faces.

What followed was confusion. I remember a volley of rifie shots, and then a loud burst of cheering. The tiger lay dead, and half a dozen officers from the cantonment were crowding around us. Pandu had gone home, and guided a rescue party back to the jungle. Had they arrived a few minutes later they would have found only our mangled bodies.

Though Pandu had imperiled our lives by his frightened flight, he had also saved them. Lucius concluded to for give him and retain him in his service. But Pandu's reputation as a "shirkaree" was gone forever. W.M. M. GRAYDOK.

As we instinctively halted, we heard a low furious growl. Glancing to the left we saw a sight that chilled the blood with horror. Twenty feet down the shore of the pool, in the shade of a rock and overhanging reeds, crouched a monstrous tigress. Beside her was a playful six months old cub. For an instant I was petrified with tear. I heard Lucius and Pandu breathing hard behind me. The next my nerves were steady enough. I remembered I was nearest the animal. On me devolved the duty of defence. Up went my rifle, and with a hasty aim I pulled the trigger. Perhaps my arm trembled a little—anyway the ball hit the cub in the breast and stretched it lifeless beside its mother. The rage of the tigress was fearful to see. Her eyes grew like living coals, and she roared like a fury. The next instant she hunched herself forward—straight toward me. I was sotually fascinated by the sight. I think I moved a few inches, and that unconscious act saved my life. The long, tawny body of the tigress struck me sideways and pitched me headfore-most into the muddy pool.

As I staggered to my feet, covered with filth and water, I heard the roar of a rifle. Then I saw the tigress quivering in her death agonies on the ground. She was quite dead before I reached the spot. Lucius stood over her with a smoking rifle in his hand. His face shown with trumph through its pallor. I waded out kneedeep and bent over to grope for the weapon. But just then a low cry from Pandu brought me stiffly erect. I heard a threshing noise in the dry reeds. It was yet at some distance. I hastily reclined Lucius, and we looked in the direction of the sound. A second later a deep, awful roar echoed through the tungle. It fairly stood our hair on end. The sight was too much for Pandu, old hunter though he was. He had never been considered a coward, but in the winkling of an eye he turned and fied down the shore of the pool, taking both rides with him.

A dismal roar from the rear, till of blended grief and rage, spurred us to greater speed.

The light was fading and it is little marvel that we soon lost all knowledge of our bearings. For a time we hoped that tiger had abandoned the chase. At all events it is certain that he lingered a little by the bodies of his mate and cub.

Stomach Liver Cure

The Most Astonishing Medical Discovery of the Last One Hundred Years. It is Pleasant to the Taste as the Sweetest Nectar.

It is Safe and Harmless as the Purest Milk. This wonderful Nervine Tonic has only recently been introduced into this country by the proprietors and manufacturers of the Great South American Nervine Tonic, and yet its great value as a curative agent has long been known by a few of the most learned physicians, who have not brought its merits and value to the knowledge of the

This medicine has completely solved the problem of the cure of indigestion. dyspepsia, and diseases of the general nervous system. It is also of the greatest value in the cure of all forms of failing health from whatever cause. It performs this by the great nervine tonic qualities which it possesses, and by its great curative powers upon the digestive organs, the stomach, the liver and the bowels. No remedy compares with this wonderfully valuable Nervine Tonic as a builder and strengthener of the life forces of the human body, and as a great renewer of a broken-down constitution. It is also of more real permanent value in the treatment and cure of diseases of the lungs than any consumption remedy ever used on this continent. It is a marvelous cure for nervousness of females of all ages. Ladies who are approaching the critical period known as change in life, should not fail to use this great Nervine. Tonic, almost constantly, for the space of two or three years. Is, will carry them safely over the danger. This great strengthener and curative is of inestimable value to the aged and infirm, because its great. energizing properties will give them a new hold on life. It will add ten

As a cure for every class of Nervous Diseases, no remedy has been able to compare with the Nervine Tonic, which is very pleasant and harmless in all its effects upon the youngest child or the oldest and most delicate individual. Nine tenths of all the ailments to which the human family is heir are dependent on nervous exhaustion and impaired digestion. tion. When there is an insufficient supply of nerve food in the blood, a general state of debility of the brain, spinal marrow, and nerves is the result. Starved nerves, like starved muscles, become strong when the right kind of food is supplied; and a thousand weaknesses and ailments disappear as the nerves recover. As the nervous system must supply all the power by which the vital forces of the body are carried on, it is the first to suffer for want of perfect nutrition. Ordinary food does not contain a sufficient quantity of the kind of nutriment necessary to repair the wear our present mode of living and labor imposes upon the nerves. For this reason it becomes necessary that a nerve food be supplied. This South American Nervine has been found by analysis to contain the essential elements out of which nerve tissue is formed. This accounts for its universal adaptability to the cure of all forms of nervous des-

Tangement.
