Flowers Strewn on the Graves of Departed Members Thursday.

A LARGE PROCESSION

Past Supreme Prelate James Moulson Delivers an Eloquent Address on the Significance of the Day and the Lessons it Should Teach to Members of the Order.

With appropriate ceremony, the Knights of Pythias Thursday afternoon visited the graves of their departed brothers in Fern-hill, Church of England and Methodist cemeteries, and decked each grave with floral tributes.

At 2 o'clock about 200 members of the order assembled at Castle Hall, Germain street, and then, headed by the 62nd Regiment band, marched to Queen's Rink. Here the barouches laden with flowers Regiment band, marched to Queen's Kink.

are surrounded not by that which reminds you of the world and its pleasures, but by that which reminds you of death. Here you are surrounded not by stately stone maissions or beautiful wooden structures, but by green mounds, little hills of clay, which mark the place in which were laid some to whom you were inked by the strongest ties of brotherly love. Some who made your homes bright and heappy, whose friend hip and love filled your hearts with joy, whose lives itself as sunfixens across your path.

When standing at a grave or roaming through the city of the dead, what solemn thoughts are forced upon the minds of all. It matters not at what time, whether it be when the cold form is laid away, or years after when their frame has returned the happy or unhappy life lived, and the part you took in making it; the duty you owed to those who are gone, and whether or not you discharged it or you should. There is the knowledge of the way your example and influence led them. If it was upward toward a higher and better life your recollections are pleasant, but if it was downward toward darkness and sin, regiret file your heart. But it comes too late to benefit those who are gone.

Let a realization of this cause you to make a greater effort, to show such an example and exercise such an influence as may lead others to paths of safety, peace, and happiness. As Pythians it is your duty to live so as to brighten and to bless. Are you so living, or does your life cast shadows across your own and the path of others? Pythianism teaches grand lessons. You may with puide point to its declaration of principles. You may talk of its impressive ceremonies, and boast of its financial condition, and its large and increasing membership, but this alone will avail nothing in accomplishing the great object of the order.

This can be accomplished only by individual and united effort by each, in his daily life exemplifying its teaching.

Blindly Refuses to Believe That the Boy is at All De-prayed.

A PATHETIC FAITH.

Believes He Was Not Given a Fair Chance or He Would Have Been a Good Boy-Does Not Think He Intended to Kill the Guard, But Simply to Escape

"I don't know what could have got into Freddie to act as he did in trying to escape from the reformatory," said Mrs. Good from the reformatory," said Mrs. Goodspeed to The Te-egraph Thursday.

Mrs. Goodspeed was seen at her home yesterday, while attending to her household duties, and she feels keenly the latest trouble that her young son has got into.

In speaking of her son she said that she feels positive that the boy had no intention of killing Guard Marr when he swun the iron bar down on the man's head She thinks that he simply wished to disable the man so that he could escape. She said that Freddie has not had the chance to do better since his imprisonment in the Industrial Home. Before he left the count jail, where he was imprisoned for week in a cell, the boy asked his mother on day when she called on him if she coul not arrange to have him put in some pl not arrange to have him put in some place where he could get something to do; that if he remained in a cell six months longer with nothing to do it would kill him.

Mrs. Goodspeed said that from the time the boy was sentenced to the reformatory it seemed that those in charge of the this stitution were down on him. After his sentence he was locked upon a seell in the country sail for five weeks before he was emoved to the Boys' prison, and on reach in there he was again placed in a cell, where he was kept for a couple of months. The last time she visited her son was or Good Friday, and she asked the superintendent if the boys were not taught some trade by the people in the city, and Mr. Longley said that the men who instructed the boys in trades only visited the lace about once a year. She asked Freddie nen what he was doing, and the boy re she said that her son-in-law was looking after the matter, and at all events no matter what would turn up she would look after the boy to the last. Mrs. Goodspeed said that Freddie would not kill a chicken, and showed the reporter a clipting taken from a recent issue of the Dally News, of Salem (Mass.), in which it stated: "Those who knew Goodspeed while he was in this city say that he was a most exemplary young fellow, and dei clare that he must have been corrupted by bad companions after going to New Brunswick."
