From Truth.

As here I sit in shade and tweed
Secure, serene and idle,
While Pegasus, once restive steed,
Sans saddle loils and bridle,
Two ancient friends of kindred type
(None trustier or muter)
Benignant gleam—b brier pipe,
A rowing-pot of pewter.

What need to praise Cabana's pride, Regalias, Cazadores, Or, howso named, glow deified His aromatic glories? These worship, whiff, and cast away Inconstant, if resplendent— The pipe, the pipe alone can stay, Like heart and home attendant.

Let crystals brim with costly wine—
A moment's joy they measure,
But which can more than others shrine
The relics prized of Pleasure?
They, unrecording flatterers, ripe
For Fortune, but salute her,
Nor brave her frown like thou, O Pipe,
Thou, monumental Pewter.
