COMMENTS ON THURSDAY'S ONE ACT PLAYS

ers had made one aware of a re-juvenation in the U. N. B. Dramatic Society, but until one had actually seen the production of three one act plays it was possible to believe that the rejuvenation was more apparent than real. Having seen them, all doubts The rejuvenation real: the plays were performed admirably and to the obvious delight of the capacity audiences.

In "The Twelve Pound Look", directed by Albert Tunis, all the characters performed creditably. William Barwick was a lively, if somewhat too uniformly flamboyant Sir Harry; Joanne Corbin was an attractive and suitably meek Lady Sims; Jacqueline Webster was a briskly efficient Kate; and Walter Fleet was a discreet and dignified Butler. My main criticism of this play would be of the set and the costumes. The set was so arranged that the characters spent altogether too much time at the rear of the stage, whence they were sometimes inaudible; and it was a very drab and unimaginative set in any case As for costume, surely Miss Webster, who was supposed to have blossomed out as a result of leaving her husband, was ill advised to wear that sombre brown suit?

Of "If Men Played Cards as Women Do", directed by Stan Jobb, one need say little beyond the fact that the audience loved every minute of it. The play is a clever skit, and Bell, Walker, spirit of it exactly. Bell was especially effective in buffoonery, two more significant efforts.

The constant roar of loudspeak- lessly throughout. Wilma Sansom, as Ethel, was called upon to show more variety of mood and attitude and carried out the task perfectly. Her facial expressions, gestures, posture and voice were all just what they should have been, and she was especially good in her most difficult momentthe headstone episode. Alvin Shaw was a very persuisive insurance salesman, suitably coarse, senti-mental, and philistine. The set was better arranged in this play, and the costumes were more intelligently chosen. What faults there were are in the play itself; it seems to me that Robertson Davies got a brilliantly comic idea, developed it so far, and then suddenly grew tired or afraid of it and dropped The ending is lame, and the moralizing is far too explicit. Hower, it is a better play than Barrie's Twelve Pound Look", and has a lot of authentic rural Canadiana

On the whole, this was a most successful evening, and augurs well for An Inspector Calls. See you Still on the subject of sports, a discussion arose concerning man-agers of various Varsity teams and their responsibilities. The problem here seemed to be whether the managers should be held accountable for sweaters or other equipment "borrowed" by those people eager to equip their own teams or whether the S. R. C. would accept the responsibility. No definite conclusion was reached on the matter

The second division, that of stellar physics, has five positions open In general this division deals with the study of stellar atmospheres and the study of the earth's at-mosphere. Four of the five positions are open in the study of meteors-by visual, radar and camera methods. As in the other diision, Dr. Beals added, these positions are for students in applied Division three, he went on, deals with Terrestial magnetism. year) and Baker Lake, N. W. T. $3000 per year). It was also pointed out at this stage of the talk that since these two settlements were so far from civilization that almost all the money earned could be saved. There is simply nothing to spend it on.

The fourth division to be mentioned had as its chief problem the study of gravity. Such a study is important because in certain places the earth's crust can be studied due to the variations in gravity. This study can also be used in the field of mining to detect various deposits of ore. In the division dealing with seismology, the study of earthquakes, Dr. Beals said that there are three positions open. This diision also offers the chance for success to anyone wanting to leave for the wilds of Resolute Bay at $3600 per year. This process of study is also of a great help in the search for oil, although Dr. Beals concluded, the Canadian Government is not putting its scientists to that task. The oil companies can much more easily stand the financial strain, he explained.

Dr. Beals summed up his address by saying that work during the transportation to and from the job and finally, all the jobs are apt to have a large degree of night work involved.

Dr. Beals then held a question period for those so inclined to swell their knowledge. At this stage of the discussion (a) the faculty seemed to completely outnumtime, John Peers was accepted as ber the students, (b) the questions, to say nothing of the answers, became too technical for this Brunswickan Reporter, (c) dinner time arrived and (d) everyone including Dr. Beals, decided to go home for some food.
