Two Norwegians Climb to a Height of 23,900 Feet.

of 23,200 Feet.

The boldest and most successful feat of mountaincering in many a day is that of the Norwegians, Rubenson and Monrad-Aas, who late last year reached the summit crest of Kabru in the Himalayas. The details of their work have just appeared in the Alpine Journal.

They attained a height of 23,900 feet, the highest on record. W. H. Workman baa neld the record since 1903 with 25,294 feet, made far to the west in the Karakoram branch of the Himalayas. Graham claimed in 1883 to have reached 23,700 feet on Kabru, but the fact is disputed by most mountaineers.

the highest on record. W. H. Workman had neld the record since 1903 with $2.794 feet, made far to the west in the Karakoram branch of the Himaiayas, Graham chaimed in 1883 to have reached $2.700 feet on Kabru, but the fact is disputed by most mountaineers.

The fact that Kabru, though a little over 24,000 feet high; his ranked only as No. 49 among the tallest summits of the Himalayas, gives an impressive idea of these wonderful elevations. Just a little to the east rises the mighty mass of Kanchenjunga, five years ago classed as third and now second among the high mountains; and eighty miles or so to the northwest is Mount Everest, the highest mountain in the world.

The ice and snow gave them little difficulty up to 19,300 feet, and then came the perils of smooth ice on the steepest of slopes and of rock and ice avalanches from far above that lest the mettle of the best men.

For five days they were cutting steps in the solid ice amid a chaos of ice med des and crevasses in a frozen world of the most fantastic forms. Every danger of climbing in the Alps and Caucasua is intensified in these upper reaches of the Himalayan summits, but the explorers have nothing save praise for their coolies, who proved after a short training in the use of the ice axe and rope to be keen and effective mountaineers.

Half way up this ice slope they found a flat bit of ground where they pitched camp and rested two days. They were now 21,500 feet above seed level.

huge ice blocks, and this danger required constant vigilance. Great banks of cloud usually barred the scene below them, though sometimes they caught views of Darjeeling, some fifty miles to the southwest.

They were two days making the next 500 feet of ascent, and at 22,000 feet all but the two best coolies were sent back to the lower camp. The four men in advance passed a miserable night huddled in their little tent with the temperature over 20 degrees below Fahrenheit.

On Oct. 20 they started on the final attempt to reach the summit. The great cold was intensified by a high wind and progress was slow, for every step had to be cut in the frozen snow and often they had to stop to look after their feet, which threatened to freeze. They dropped their only watch early in the day, and it went skimming down and over the precipice.

the day, and it went skimming down and over the precipice.

Upward they struggled until about 6 p. m., they think, when they reached a place which they thought was the top of Kabru. But here they found a ridge, perhaps less than 100 feet above them, which they are positive is the culminating summit of the mountain.

The sun had set, the task ahead of them was difficult and dangerous, and they dared not go on. To spend the night at the summit would mean death, for the cold was almost unbearable, and hey must retreat at once to the below.

The moon soon rose, and with its aid they made their way safely down, though not without one thrilling moment. Rubenson slipped on a very steep slope and flashed past his friend like a shot. Monrad-Aas threw himself flat to support the strain on the rope. He saved his comrade and himself, but four of the five strands of the Swiss tourist rope parted and Rubenson was held by a single strand.

Because it was a great achievement it is all the more to be regretted that impediments, chiefly the bitter cold of the last day, prevented these mountaineers from completing the ascent when they were so near their goal.

Practical Value of Voting Machines.

The New York Globe finds in every ballot box that is opened before Justice Lambert in the Hearst-McClellan case a new set of unanswerable arguments in favor of voting machines. To insure the rule of the majority and to protect the results of elections against accident and caprice on the part of election officers it finds that voting machines are the only effective means, and it demands their adoption in the metropolis at once. adoption in the metropolis at once.

In Utica and nearly all other cities of the Staje the advantages of the voting machine have been proved by experience. The count on the machine, properly operated, cannobe disputed. The voter cannot mark his ballot, and, therefore, cannot lose it. Every one must vote in a legal manner, and consequently there can be no defective ballots. # Bad Year for Sealing.

Bad Year for Sealing.

Sealing in 1907, according to a note by T. Southwell in the Zoologist, was, owing to bad weather and the heavy ice-pack, nearly as bad as in 1905, which was the worst since 1898. Two of the fleet of 24 vessels were wrecked, and the number of skins secured by the others fell short of last year's total by close on 100,000, with a decrease of rather more than $30,000 in money value. The total number of seals killed was just over 245,000, the market price being $4.20 per hundredweight for those of young animals and $3.00 for those of adults. TICKETS FROM NEWSPAPERS.

That newspapers are constantly left on the seats in railway trains nobody with the slightest power of observation need be told. On the other hand, few people would suppose that these discarded papers could prove of any value to the company controlling the line. But this is essentially the age for the utilization of waste products and great corporations are quick to own any labor of money saving device.

Probably the strangest development in this direction would appear to be that now prevailing in Belgium. Upon the Government railway systems newspapers left on the train are the property of the nation, to be used by it for the
