Deceived AND Disowned True as Steel!

CHAPTER V.
IN DURANCE VILE.

If only he could send a message to Topsy! He glared around the narrow cell like a trapped animal. What could he do? He threw himself on the bed, and groaned aloud in his despair.

How long he lay there in the dark, save for a single ray from the moon which came through the barred window, he had no means of telling; but he arose from his gloomy reverie by a voice calling his name.

"Reu! Reu!"

He started up joyfully.

"Gran," he cried, "Gran, you've come back!"

"Hush, my laddie—not so loud!" replied Wynter—for it was he.

Reuben went close to the window, pulling himself up to the level by means of the bed.

"How did you know? You don't know how I wanted you!" he said, fervently.

Wynter's eyes gleamed with anger as he looked up at the pale face of the young man.

"I'll news flies apace," he said. "Tell me, Reu, how came you to get into their hands? Did you shoot the hare?"

"Not I!" said Reuben, proudly. "I was on my own business."

"Thank goodness, lad," said the old man. "But what's to be done now? Will you try and make your escape? I could pick the lock of that door, I believe."

"No, no, Gran," said Reuben. "I'll not run away. I must go through with this to the bitter end, and keep my mouth shut. Don't ask me more; but if you love me, take a message for me—will you?"

Scientific Cure for Eczema

New Discovery--Thousands Find Relief.

No scientific discovery in recent years has attracted such wide-spread attention among physicians in this country and throughout Canada as the wonderful D. D. D. Prescription for Eczema.

After years of debate, medical authorities are now agreed that eczema and other skin diseases are not seated in the blood but are caused by myriads of microscopic germs gnawing the flesh just below the epidermis. The patient is perfectly healthy, it is only the skin that is diseased.

Hence, scientists are now agreed that you must cure the skin through the skin. The medicine must be in liquid form in order to penetrate pro-

Improved and brought every part to perfection; yet in such a manner as neither to destroy nor disturb its time-honored appearance. A magnificent avenue of trees lined the carriage drive to the entrance. The hall, which was of paneled oak, bore the tattered badges and banners of his bygone ancestors. From this hall rose a broad oaken staircase, leading to a gallery, adorned with choice tapestries and pictures, and giving access to the main apartments. Beyond the great ballroom were the conservatories, with cool corners amid tropical palms and ferns—many of them brought from foreign lands by Lord Cravenden himself.

To-night the ballroom was brilliantly lighted and filled with the soft, sweet sound of music; and to Olive the great room seemed to be thronged with dancers when she entered with Sir Edwin and made her way to the hostess.

Lady Cravenden—the mother of the erratic present holder of the title—looked with quiet approval on the beautiful girl as she took her hand, while she murmured an apology to Sir Edwin for the short notice given in the invitation.

"For which you must blame me," said a musical voice behind them, as Lord Cravenden came up. "It was abominably short notice," he continued, as he bowed over Olive's hand, "but I am thinking of starting for the Mediterranean soon, and I wanted to see my friends once more."

Lady Cravenden sighed as she turned to Sir Edwin, for her son had only returned from the East the week before.

"May I have the next dance?" Lord Cravenden asked Olive, as he gazed at her admiringly.

Olive smiled and handed him her programme.

"I'd like to engage you for every dance," he said daintily, as he scribbled his name.

"You would regret it afterward," said Olive, taking his proffered arm.

Every eye followed them as they took their place in the dance—for indeed they made a handsome pair—and it was not wonderful that, after a glance at Olive's glowing face, the match-making mothers sighed in despair. Lady Cravenden watched them affectionately, then whispered to Sir Edwin:

"She is perfect!"

"And as good as she is beautiful," he returned, his face alight with loving pride.

"I wish I had such a daughter," said his old friend.

Sir Edwin gazed at her smilingly.

"You have a son," he said, "a splendid son."

"Ah, yes," the mother said quickly. "I could echo your words, Sir Edwin—he is as good as gold."

Sir Edwin nodded.

"Yes, indeed," he said. "If only we could bind him here among us!"

"Who knows?" said Lady Cravenden, musingly, as her eyes rested on Olive, who had passed them in the whirl of the dance. "The iron meets the magnet, Sir Edwin, and then there is no more unrest; every heart has its own lodestone."

She turned to welcome a guest, and Sir Edwin mingled with the throng, to hear on all sides fresh praise of Olive's beauty. Before an hour had passed, he knew that she was the belle of the room. Lord Cravenden had succeeded in securing one more waltz, and then, compelled by his duties as host, had torn himself away.

Quickly and smoothly went the evening, but at last it was approaching supper time. Lord Cravenden took Olive down to supper. But they were scarcely seated when the butler approached him with a telegram, and, with many apologies to Olive, he was obliged to leave her, in order to send a message in reply. When he returned to the supper room, he found that Morgan Verner occupied the seat he had vacated, and was just about to take Olive back to the ballroom.

Verner had stepped in, with quiet self-possession, before Olive had known that he was near her, and it was with a start that she heard his smooth voice saying:

"I hope I have not taken one else's seat, Miss Seymour—but I do so want to sit here. Is Sir Edwin with you?"

"Yes," said Olive. "There he sits, with the Countess of Cranmore."

"We are so late," continued Morgan. "I was afraid we should not get here at all."

He waited, as if to be asked the cause, but Olive was not sufficiently interested and had turned to speak to Mr. Normanby, who was seated at a table near.

Presently Morgan commenced to talk again.

"Do you still take a morning gallop, Miss Seymour?"

Olive's dislike to answering questions was well known to her small circle of friends; and Mr. Morgan, had he but been aware of it, could not have chosen a more effectual way of increasing her faint dislike of him.

"Sometimes I ride—sometimes I walk—but I do nothing by rule," she said, coldly.

Morgan, however, was persistent in his attempts to gain her attention, and at last he succeeded. With a tact with which few of his friends would have credited him, he praised her father's farming, and thus won Olive's ear. Encouraged by this success, he grew more confident; and, as they proceeded to the ballroom after supper, he ventured to whisper an undertone:

"Miss Seymour, I am very anxious to beg your forgiveness."

"Forgiveness for what?" asked Olive, in surprise.

"For my display of anger to your servant."

Olive's face flushed for a moment, and when she replied her voice was hard and cold.

"Reuben is not my servant, Mr. Verner—he teaches me to ride. Forgiveness is not due from me."

"If I have not apologized to him, it is owing to lack of opportunity," said Morgan, in a cringing tone.

Olive inclined her head, as if the matter were of perfect indifference to her, but Morgan continued warily:

"Soon-to-morrow—I think I shall be able to make up for my mistake, and, perchance, in helping him I shall win your thanks."

Olive drew her brows together. What did he mean? What had Reuben—? But she had no chance of asking his meaning, even if she had deigned to do so—for Lord Cravenden came up to claim his waltz. Her step suited his to a nicety, and, during the dance, his lordship found a new object in existence—better than yachts, theaters, pictures: it was to win the love of such a woman as Olive Seymour.

Referring to the Regulations under date 10th instant, respecting the sale of Household Coal, His Excellency the Administrator in Council has been pleased to amend Regulation 1 so as to permit selling and delivery of one-half ton of soft coal per fortnight instead of one-quarter ton per week, thus avoiding increased cost to consumers through the additional cartage. The amended Regulation will now read:

1. Because of the present serious conditions in the coal producing centres and the limited stock held here, it is hereby ordered that no coal vendor in the City of St. John's shall sell or deliver after this date to any household, family or tenement holder more than one-half ton (1120 lbs.) of soft coal per fortnight until further notice. Any person receiving a supply of coal under this Regulation shall not transfer it to any other person.

On recommendation of the Tonnage Committee of the Executive Council, and under the provisions of the War Measures Act, 1914, His Excellency the Administrator in Council has been pleased to approve the following Regulations respecting the sale of household coal:—

- 1) Because of the present serious conditions in the coal producing centres and the limited stocks held here, it is hereby ordered that no coal vendor in the city of St. John's shall sell or deliver after this date to any household, family or tenement holder more than one-quarter ton (560 lbs.) of soft coal per week until further notice. Any person receiving a supply of coal under this regulation shall not transfer it to any other person.
- 2) It shall be incumbent upon the coal vendors to establish such machinery as shall be necessary to prevent any person from purchasing from two or more vendors a larger supply per week than he or she is entitled to under these regulations.
- 3) Any person feeling aggrieved by this order shall furnish proofs to the Tonnage Committee that the weekly allowance provided herein is insufficient to carry on his ordinary business or trade, and the decision of the Tonnage Committee shall be final.
- 4) The vendors shall furnish on Monday morning of each week to the Tonnage Committee a certified list of the names and addresses of all persons to whom they have sold or delivered coal during the previous week, and the quantity sold or delivered.
- 5) Any person delivering coal to any person other than the person named on his delivery note shall be guilty of a breach of these regulations.
- 6) Any person having a supply of coal in stock shall not be entitled to purchase a further supply until his stock is less than one quarter ton.
- 7) The penalty for any breach of these regulations shall not exceed $500 with or without imprisonment not exceeding three months.
