A Dangerous Competitor.

Gloucester, the real fishing centre of the New England in foreign markets. Gloucester commands the whole of the fishing fleet which go forth to the various banks in quest of the valuable cod. But Gloucester schooners depend on their bait supply from either the ports of the South West Coast of Newfoundland or the Magdalen Islands, which belong to Canada. And without bait the Gloucester fisheries become non est. Therefore the success or failure of the New England fisheries depends upon Newfoundland. The Foreign Fisheries Act of 1905, made it impossible for United States fishing craft to enter banking vessels had the privilege of jigging for themselves.
