"Up to the age of eight, my boy was a strong, healthy lad, full of life and energy. While playing leap frog one day with some boys of his own age, and, while in a stooped position, a big boy jumped on his back and in falling my boy caught his foot in an iron grating and dislocated his hip. The pain was so great that he fainted and the other boys were so frightened they ran away. For hours he suffered terrible pain and when found and brought home was very weak, with his thigh and leg swollen twice its size. The doctor set the bone but the pain and exposure were too much for the poor boy and he became unconscious. A high fever set in and for weeks he ley between life and death rawing for hours at a stretch. He would, I think, be pleased at my marriage-provided the pedigree and fortune of my husband met with his approval, as they would do in this case." she added with a smile.

At the word "pedigree," a sudden fear chilled the bright hopes and fancies of Mr. Fulton. What if these iresome old guardians or trustees should ask unpleasant questions about his family?-what was he to say? It would be easy to invent, but these inventions were never sure: at any time they might fail, and the lies that, satisfied with his vast wealth and liberal offers, the fair widow's guardians would ask no tiresome
