A POETIC ROMANCE.

BY J. H. MCNAUGHTON.

Blustrated with Ten Engravings, designed by Wm. T. Smedley, and engraved by Frank French. This Art Edition is printed from the same plates from which was printed the Artists Proof Edition, and in every essential rivals that eacily edition. It is a work of 230 pages, Still inches, is faultlessly printed on the best plate paper, and is bound in white and gold. The price is, IN VELLUM CLOTH. Se; IN CALF. WITH SILK LININGS. 520.

Of the wonderful power and fascingtion of this poetic romance, it is now hardly necessary to speak. Those who have not yet been stirred with the thrill of delight by its vivid scenes and incidents will find in the following extracts some of the many expressions of enthusiasm from persons of culture who have been captivated by the charms of the heroine and her brilliant achievements.

FROM THE EARL OF LYTTON.
"I read 'Onnalinda' with attention and pleasure, and without stopping till I had finished it, a story is told with great animation of movement and picturesqueness of description." "I read 'Onnalinda' with great interest and pleasure; there is life and beauty in it which I save much enjoyed."

FROM CHARLES MACKAY, LL.D. "Onnaimda herself,"
"Onnaimda sustains its interest from first to last. Strange to say, the tale is the pleasanter ending for being in metre, and the reader is beguiled by the silvery ring of the verse."—West-inster Review. No. czzzi.

"One is filled with a fuller sense of simple delight and gratitude by such a charming posm sometimes." We have not read a poetic romance for many a day and year which takes our sucy more completely."—London Literary World, No. 8%. fancy more completely."—London Literary World, No. 32.

In one important feature—its perfect adaptation for reading in public or to the social circle—"Onnainness in unique among poetic romances: the rapidly recurring incidents portrayed in melodious and pictures de verse, inspire both reader and listener. Of the public readings from "Onnainnes" we take the following brief extracts from leading journals:

The Toronto Daily Mail (Dec. 31, 1837). "The poem is an epic, which is at once grand in conception, and full of those pathetic and dramatic incidents peculiar to all forest romances. Mrs. Brown-Pond impersonated the native simplicity, romance and pathetic incidents in the life of the heroine, Onnainda, with such a power of imagination, beauty of expression and grace, that the andience were entranced and earantured."

The Toronto Empire (Dec. 31, 1837): "The poetic romance of Onnainda' certainly gives Mrs. Brown-Pond great scope for her abilities. It possesses such animation of movement that even its porusal captivates the reader, but his interest in it is interpreted with the power of dolineation and keen dramatic insight possessed by Mrs. Brown-Pond."

The Toronto Globe (Dec. 31, 1837): "The whole performance last night was in every way excellent and a source of great enjoyment to all who were present. Mrs. Brown-Pond was briefly introduced by President Wilson. The poem to which she devoted her attention is of a high order of merit. Several passages of great beauty and dramatic power were among the parts read."

This illustrated edition of "Onnalinda" is a special effort of the publishers to clothe the most arming poetic romance of the time in an elegance worthy of it. To those desirous of adding their treasures a real ernament to delight the eye and enchant the heart the present affords a
