Reporters in the House of Commons.—On Saturday a report of the select committee of the House of Commons was printed, respecting the exclusion of strangers. The question raised was, whether reporters should be excluded during a division, and upon the notice of any individual member that "strangers" were present. The committee report that the existing usage of excluding strangers during a division, and upon the notice of any individual member that strangers are present, has prevailed from a very early period of parliamentary history; that the instances in which the power of an individual member to exclude has been exercised, have been very rare, and that it is the unanimous opinion of the committee that the instances in which the power of an individual member to exclude has been exercised, have been very rare, and that it is the unanimous opinion of the committee that the instances in which the power of an individual member to exclude has been exercised, have been very rare, and that it is the unanimous opinion of the committee that it is the unanimous opinion of the committee that the instances in which the power of an individual member to exclude has been exercised, have been very rare, and that it is the unanimous opinion of the committee that it is the unanimous opinion of the committee that the instances in which the power of an individual member to betroit was a distance of 250 miles. His immediate successor William the Fourth visited it several times during his reign, and her present Majesty, on two or three occasions in the early part of her succession to the throne, became its occupant. IRELAND. THE QUEEN'S VISIT.—The corporation of Dublin have agreed to an Address to be presented to Her Majesty on her arrival in the Irish metropolis. The Lord Mayor has distinctly stated that it is not the intention of her Majesty to honour him with her presence at a banquet at the Mansion-house, the Royal visit being, as stated from the first, intended to be strictly private. The Mayor briefly explained the objects of the meeting, and characterized this as the greatest and most important work which had ever been contemplated in the Province. Hamilton, from its position, would unquestionably reap great advantages from the completion of the railway; the only question, and it was a question for the tax-payers to decide, was whether the City should assist in the construction. His own opinion was, that unless we did something for ourselves, we need hardly look for assistance elsewhere. It was quite necessary that those who had the greatest interest in a work should set a proper example to others at a distance, whom they wished to embark in the undertaking. He had ever been of opinion that no work could be undertaken, which would contribute more essentially to the prosperity of this City, and not only of the City, but of the whole country, for he did not entertain a doubt that within five years of the completion of the road, property here would double in value; and the Stock, beside, would be among the best paying on the Continent.

We saw but few Indians at work in the various mechanic's shops, the greater number having been taken, as we were informed, to work in the harvest field; and in the school department, we were surprised to find the children of the red man so far advanced in the English branches, the oldest of the boys not being more than twelve years of age. Indeed this would place many of our white boys, who have attended school four or five years completely into the shade. Mr. Cyrus Griffin, the Teacher, very kindly invited us in. It possesses this advantage over the Federarative Union of the Provinces, that it would only tie them together, so long as the bond was mutually agreeable to each member of the League. It would not unite them by an organic law, which must either give an unjust weight in the joint Legislature to the smaller Provinces, as it would if New Brunswiek were represented as numerously as Cauada, or must subject the interests of the smaller to those of the larger population. There was the strongest reason to believe that the shot was fired by some person either in or connected with Lafontaine, shouse: therefore, as it was the duty of the Jury to ascertain, if possible, by whom the fatal shot was fired, it became absolutely necessary to know who was in the house at the time. Yet this coroner decided that no question which might elicit this information should be put!!! The Morning Courier states that Coursol was actually in the house at the very moment. It would appear that Lafontaine-himself was also in the house at the time. We look anxiously for a full account of the proceedings.

We regret to find that during the inquest, the Hotel (Cyrus's) where it was being held, took fire and was totally consumed. We earnestly hope that this was accidental—if not, it shows a fearful state of society.

DIED.

Died at Toronto, on Sunday last, in the 21st year of his age, after a few hours illness, Wm. R. Cline, son of Wm. Cline, Esq., of Cornwall.—

The untimely decease of this promising young man, in the midst of health, and buoyant with hope for the bright career that was opening before him, which nothing a few hours beforehand seemed likely to oppose, is but another verification of the saying, so startlingly true, and yet so strangely unbeeded, that "in the midst of life we are in death;"—and reads a solemn lesson on the vanity of all human calculations. He had but lately come to Toronto to complete his studies for the Bar, with his relative Mr. Wm. Vankonghnet, when, seized with the prevailing disease, he was hurried with fearful rapidity to an early tomb. No Quackery—no Deception.—in aeting forth the virtues of this truly great medicine, we have no desire to deceive those who are labouring under affliction, nor do we wish to ealogise it more than it justly deserves. Yet when we look around and see the vast amount of suffering and distress occasioned by many of the diseases in which this medicine has proved so highly successful, we feel that we cannot urge its claims too-strongly, or say too much in in its favour.

Various remedies, it is true, have been offered and puffed into notice for the cure of diseases of the lungs, and some have been found, no doubt, very useful; but of all that have yet been discovered, it is admitted by physicians, and all who have witnessed its effects, that none has proved as successful as this. For Asthma, Shortness of Breath, and similar affections, it may be pronounced a positive cure. It has cured Asthma in many cases of ten and twenty years' standing, after physicians had declared the case beyond the reach of medicine,

One of three in his family and the only son, of that amiable disposition which makes friends of stangers, innocent in his pursuits, and a strict lover of truth, affectionate and generous; he led a guileless life, and passed from the world a perfect child of nature. Gifted with no mean talents; of a ready apprehension, and of singularly correct judgment, he already commanded the attention of his professional superiors, and bid fair to occupy a position at the Bar, to which he was shortly about to be called, alike honorable to himself and creditable to his family. Deprived now of the gratification of seeing him take his place there, let their bitter distress be soothed with the belief that he was not anfitted to appear at that higher bar to there, let their bitter distress be soothed with the belief that he was not infitted to appear at that higher bar to which he has been thus quickly summoned. The deceased had been a pupil of the Rev.
