PALMER—HESSEL.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Hessel, on Wednesday, was the scene of a pretty autumn wedding, when their eldest daughter, Kathleen, was united in marriage to Colin Leroy Palmer, only son of Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Palmer of Emery street, in the presence of only immediate relatives. Rev. A. S. H. Cree officiated. The bride, wearing a lovely gown of ivory satin, with overdress of beaded georgette, and carrying an ivory prayer book, gift of the bridegroom, entered the drawing-room, which was tastefully decorated with ferns and autumn foliage, on the arm of her father, to the strains of the Bridal Chorus from Lohengrin, played by Miss Thelma Hessel, her cousin. Miss Isabell Hessel was maid of honor, gowned in sand georgette, with corsage of Russell roses; Miss Dorris and Iris Hessel were flower girls. The groom was attended by Lyle Bamford. During the signing of the register, Miss Grace Smith, cousin of the bride, sang "Because." After the ceremony a dainty breakfast was served. Gifts were presented to the maid of honor, pianist, soloist, and groomsman, by the bridegroom.

Mr. and Mrs. Palmer left later for Toronto and Niagara Falls, the bride travelling in a smart costume of brown broadcloth, with hat to match. On their return they will reside in London.

WHITE—McLENNAN.
GODERICH, Oct. 21.—At the home of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth McLennan, Lakeshore road, on Wednesday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock, the wedding took place of their eldest daughter. Isabella M., to Dr. Raymond L. White of Chicago. The decorations of the house were in yeilow and white, and the ceremony was performed under an arch of evergreens bedecked with maple leaves and anumn flowers.

Hugh Matheson of Toronto, and Rev. Finlay Matheson of Stratford, cousins of the bride. Miss Violet McLennau, sister of the bride, played Mendelssohn's wedding march.

The bride looked lovely in a gown of white charmeuse satin with overdress of white silk chantilly lace and trimmings of sweethearts, the bridal veil was caught up with grange blosdress of white silk chantilly lace and trimmings of sweethearts, the bridal veil was caught up with grange blossoms, and carried a shower bouquet of Sweetheart roses. Little Miss Francis Thompson, the flower girl, looked sweet and dainty in a dress of winte organdy and carrying a big basket of white asters and carnations. Miss Margaret McLennan, cousin of the bride, sang pleasingly, "O Promise Me."

At the wedding repast appropriate speeches from the Rev. Mr. Hardie and the Messrs. Matheson were given, and the groom responded. The groom's gift to the bride was a platinum bar pin set with diamonds; to the flower girl a green gold bracelet; to the planist an emerald bar pin, and to the soloist a platinum bar pin. In the evening a reception was held, at which about 150 guests were present.

Was it his business sense that borompted him to take it?
But how odd that the receiver of a between the place. "You look absurdly young to be married, Anne. But I know you'll make a perfect little wife."

But how odd that the receiver of a gift should act like that!

Of course, Fred was rather odd. He never did act quite like anyone else. We found ourselves in the street again, Fred radiant, with the pearl pin shimmering milkily in the centre of his tie.

"You're a perfect darling, Anne! How can I thank you?"

I smiled, well pleased. Not at such a moment would I ask him for possession of the receipt.

But I couldn't keep from wondering.

And then the dreadful thought struck me that the purchase of the pin had been merely a way of extracting extra money from me!

Place. "You look absurdly young to be married, Anne. But I know you'll make a perfect little wife."

We found a taxi, and drove to a cheerful little restaurant not far from Fifth avenue. It was much less pretentious than the one I'd found Fred in the other day.

But then Fred was with Julie at that time. And Julie was the sort of woman who liked to flash around gay restaurants. Julie adored seeing and being seen. It gave me pleasure.

Well, of course, it gave me pleasure.

Fred partook of everything with a heartiness that was rather odd in such a blase, experienced young man. For Fred is something of an epicure. He owns a highly-cultivated palate.

DIAMOND DYES THE MADDIACE OF ANNE about it.

I'm afraid I did not think the cooking excellent. But I was too exhilarated to bother over such mundane affairs.

We began with hors-d'oeuvres. Potato salad, very greasy, and made with a poor substitute, not with olive oil. Rather wilted sardines, too. And radishes, pretty tough.

I hardly touched the soup. I always do mistrust the soup in these Bohemian little places. Knowing the economic tendencies of the Latin mind. various "remains" gleaned from the other diners and lunchers' plates go to swell the richness and the stockiness of that fluid!

Chicken succeeded fish, cooked a la casserole. I nibbled at an athletic little leg. It certainly was hard and mob of people, one's conversation Chicken drowned by the raucous music of the casserole.

Of course, it suited me.
It was a simple little meal. There life had really begun. Fred had such a possessive air.

The 'padrone' of the place—it was Italian—ushered us to a tiny corner table.

"Thank goodness, there's no music here," remarked my companion, depositing his hat and stick on the floor, and picking up the menu. "Here, waiter, we'll take the table d'hote lunch. That saves time, and the bother of ordering various dishes. Suit you, Anne?"

Of course, it suited me.

The bill was brought. It reached the grand total of a dollar and a half. "Cheap, isn't it?" grinned Fred, as he settled with the man.

I nodded. But, personally, I thought the meal expensive at the price. The waiter moved away.

And then Fred leaned across the table, and in a low voice said:

"I might go round and do some advance business on that deal if you'll tet me have the fifteen hundred dollars —immediately!"

Of course, it suited me.
