Here consider sequel of patron system (see American Historians re its effect here). When we look at the patron system of N. York from modern American pt of view it seems a patchwork of feudalism in new world quite out of place & isolated. When you put other similar experiments by its side. Maryland manors, seigniors of Quebec, baronies of Nova Scotia & colonies of Virginia, we see there is a considerable in early economic histy of this country not sufficiently attended to. We are apt to start with a mistaken impression of early colonization owing to case of modern transportation. In the 17th cty the no of people who were able to cross the water at their own expense, & who wd be attracted by opportunities of prosperity in new world was very small - to those who did find afford to bring themselves the prospect may not sufficiently alluring. The colonization had to be brought about by men who had some capital who would be at the expense of transporting laborers to a ctry & who wd be given an adequate return for it. On other side families & absolute persons ready to be brought out & ready to contract with those who brought them to make some return. The colony of New Hamp. taking a large num is not the characteristic method, it is the except<sup>n</sup> method.
