

love. It is the voice of the shepherd. He had gone to the sheepfold to see if his sheep were all safe, and he found the fold empty. He followed where he heard the sheep bleating, and saw the thief running away and the wolf coming to kill the sheep. But the good shepherd did not run away. He was willing to be killed himself rather than let his sheep be harmed. He stood between his sheep and the hungry wolf, and when the wolf saw how brave and strong the shepherd was, he crouched down and crept away back into the woods.

The shepherd called his sheep close around him, taking the tiniest in his arms, and away he went back to the fold, the sheep following him, for they knew his voice. If a stranger had spoken to them, they would not have known his voice and would not have followed him. They would have been afraid of him, but they had no fear of their own shepherd.

Soon they were once more safe in the fold. The morning sun was peeping over the hill tops, and they knew they had nothing more to fear.

When Jesus had finished the story, he said, "I am the Good Shepherd: the Good Shepherd layeth down his life for the sheep." And this is our Golden Text. People are his sheep. You are the lambs of his flock. Heaven is the fold where the Good Shepherd will gather his flock. Let us listen to the voice of the Good Shepherd and follow him.
