The Revolution in English Coaracter.

T is the opinion of Mr. Bernard Shaw, as expressed in a charac-teristic preface to a late volume of his plays, that the nature of the English people has, within the past ten years, undergone certain conspicu-ous modifications. Excitability—"theatricality" is his own word for it—Mr. Shaw believes to have been steadily mounting in force among the English, usually so solid and stolid; and this he ascribes to the pronounced romanticism of taste developed among them by the literature, the books and plays, of the past five years; a taste which has caused them to lose their true sense of the realities, with all the steadying ef-

It will not be disputed that the special style of literature in vogue during a period leaves its impress upon it, nor will it be gainsaid that the demands and tastes of the period in turn determine the assential policy. determine the essential nature of its literary supply. We are hearing it said on all sides now that popular education accounts for the love of the novel of adventure. Popular education creates an enlarged reading public, but one which does not wish to have the reali-ties of life laid before it; which, indeed, in many cases, reads, or goes to the play, just to escape reality. If one accept this explanation of certain present phenomena it is only going a step farther to find in all democrati-cally organized, popularly educated societies an inherent inclination toward romanticism. As no countries have carried the modern experiment so far as the English-speaking countries, we ought not to be surprised to see strong bent toward the romantic attitude showing itself, in many directions, in an English or American public; the romantic attitude here meaning any attitude betraying absence of a full perception of the realities, or disin-GOING WEST EAST ROUN.

Out of all this we seem to draw three propositions: that democracy appears to presuppose a certain sort of popular education, that without that education there would be no democracy, and yet that that education is calculated to de-stroy the sense of the realities. Now how is this? The very plea made for the education which, more and more, is prevailing against the classical education, is just this-that it cultivates the true perception of real things. It is a "practical" education for that precise reason, say its advocates. Why then, asks the writer of "The Point of View" in "Scribner's Magazine," should this same generation manifest so much liking for the romantic fiction, the romantic plays, which are a means of getting away from the real conditions of existence? He proceeds to answer this question as follows: "It may very probably be that this liking is a taste of the moment, without ulterior connections or deeper significances. And, indeed, it seems to have been too much overlooked by some writers who have no love for the novel of adventure, that it is by no means the first time in the world that romance has been in high favor. It is none the less true that this subject does suggest another of far greater moment, which is the question what the "popular" education ought to be, and whether the demo-cratic state of modern man really needs exactly that form of it which is now so insisted upon as essential to its maintenance and well-being. To perceive the realities in the high sense, and in that sense be willing to abide by them, is never, at any time, the portion of more than the few. But general education goes forward, very properly, on the assumption that all may be made in some degree to know the life to which they belong, to realize it. Realization comes, however, only in part through the development of practical efficiency. It comes also through the unfolding of the spiritual nature, the growth of moral vision, the dreams of the imagination-to none of which is the 'classical' education a stranger." Pleasing Kind of Mal de Mer.

News comes from Honolulu that the transport "Thomas," which reached there on August 1, having on board three hundred male and one hundred female teachers, en route for the Phil-ippines to engage in educational service under the Taft Commission, developed a veritable matrimonial epidemic. The young men and women on board represented almost every State of the Union. After the transport left San Francisco friendships were formed which soon ripened into love, and the day prior to the arrival at Honolulu Captain Buford found that thirty couples desired the nuptial knot tied. He refused to permit the ceremony on board the vessel, and the next day a clergyman at Honolulu made the thirty pairs happy by uniting them in matrimony. Prior to the sailing of the transport from Honolulu several other cases were reported. A Humane Pater.

One reads so frequently of the pater-nal boot as applied to the undesirable youthful suitor that it is a pleasure to chronicle the more humane method adopted by a wealthy Glasgow mer-chant for choking off a "follower" of his daughter. The girl was very young, so was the follower, but nevertheless he called formally on the object of his affections. The merchant and his wife entered the room, the latter bearing a glass of milk and a huge slice of bread spread with butter and jam. "Now, dear, run away to bed," said the kinddear, run sway to bed, said the kind-ly mother to her daughter; "it's time that all good girls should be in bed." Then the Glasgow merchant addressed the astonished young man: "Now, youngster, you drink that glass of milk, and take that slice of bread and jam to eat on the road home—and hurry, for your mother must be anx-lous about your being out so late by yourself." The young man did not call

Children Cry for CASTORIA A Comic Opera Strike.

THERE is, as a rule, little that is humorous in a strike. But a recent strike in Columbus, O., is so humorous and at the same time so extraordinary that it seems almost incredible. It sounds as if it took place in Topsy-turvydom instead of in the United States of America. It would make a good libretto for one of Gilbert and Sullivan's crazy operettas.

This is the story of the Columbus strike: C. M. Jones is editor and proprietor of the Columbus "Press-Post"—that is, he was. The paper is now apparently being edited by almost everybody but the editor. It seems that Editor Jones got into trouble with his city editor. The city editor is a member of the Newspaper Writers' Union. THERE is, as a rule, little that is er of the Newspaper Writers' Union. Now it has long been a grievance among newspaper reporters that they are not so well treated as the printers because they have no union. On the other hand, the printers have a union which is the most powerful and prosperous trade union in the country, with perous trade union in the country, with the possible exception of the Brother-hood of Locomotive Engineers. The reporters have attempted to form un-ions. But they are like ropes of sand. So they finally decided to organize un-der the wing of the printers.

In every union printing-office there is a body called "the chapel," presided over by a "father." The foreman represents the employer, the father of the chapel represents the printers. Whenever there is a question at issue, the printers invariably take their orders from the father of the chapel inders from the father of the chapel instead of the foreman. So in the office of the "Press-Post," the reporters organized as a newspaper writers' union under the protection of the printers' Editor Jones found City Editor Marshall unsatisfactory for various rea-sons. First, he had criticized some court house officials who were friends of Editor Jones; and, second, he had been "scooped" by the other Columbus papers on a railroad wreck; they had run the wreck with "scare-heads," and City Editor Marshall had not run it at all. Therefore Editor Jones requested Marshall to resign. Marshall refused. Editor Jones then informed him that ne was discharged. Marshall at once ordered a strike, and Newspaper Writers' Union No. 2 walked out. Editor fones attempted to parley with them, and offered to secure another editor. They refused to return unless Marshall was replaced. Thereupon Editor Jones off negotiations, got ten young men from the State University porters, edited their copy himself, and it was sent to the composing-The father of the chapel walked to the imposing-stone, rapped thereon with a mallet, a chapel meeting was held, and the printers stopped their work. The father of the chapel informed Editor Jones that if the non-union copy was not removed from the hook the print-ers would strike. Editor Jones took back his non-union copy. That day the "Press-Post" did not come out. The next day Editor Jones sent the paper to press without any local news, filling it up with narratives of the low-necked gowns at Newport, snake stories, accounts of the shocking attire worn by the young women at Long Branch, and refined and pleasing miscellany of the kind usually found in the Sunday supplements of great daily newspapers. Unfortunately, Editor Jones, feeling somewhat embittered over the situation, wrote with his red right hand a savage editorial on the labor question and sent it in to the printers. Not being local news, and being written by the editor and proprietor, it might be supposed that they would print it. Not so. Again the unfortunate editor was informed that he must withdraw his non-union copy, or the printers would strike. Editor Jones withdrew his edi-At last accounts the "Press-Post" is still running without the local news, and Editor Jones is beseeching President Lynch of the International Typographical Union to devise some means by which he may be allowed to get his paper out. So the question may be asked, Who is editing the Columbus "Press-Post?" Is it the proprietor, Editor Jones? or is it the discharged employee, City Editor Marshall? or is it the Newspaper Writers' Union No. 2? or is it the father of the Columbus printers' chapel? or is it the president of the International Typographical Union of North America?

Expenses of Society Life in New York. Mothers of daughters having social aspirations find it very expensive to meet all the social requirements and demands made upon them, as shown in proceedings in the Supreme Court of New York brought by Mrs. Kate Shippen Roosevelt to have the yearly allowance of her daughter, Dorothy Quincy Roosevelt, increased from $1,500 to $3,000. Even the larger sum will not by any means be sufficient to keep this young lady in good society and meet all the various expenses in-cidental thereto; but Mrs. Roosevelt says she is willing to pay the additional expenses, which will amount to several thousand dollars annually, out of her own pocket. Miss Roosevelt inherited $100,000 from a deceased uncle which is being held in trust for her until she becomes of age next year. Inasmuch as her income amounts to $4.000 and Mrs. Roosevelt proved to $4,000 and Mrs. Roosevelt proved to the satisfaction of William J. A. Mc-Kim, the referee, that $3,000 is only a reasonable amount for a young woman of good social position, the increased allowance was granted. In giving her testimony, Mrs. Roosevelt said she had six tutors for her daughter, who, among other things, was being edu-cated in German French and Italian. cated in German, French, and Italian. She was also being instructed in elo-She was also being instructed in elocution, belongs to several social dancing-classes, is a member of golf, tennis and bathing clubs, is fond of riding, and has an English governess. Mrs. Roosevelt added that the needs of her daughter were increasing year by year, that she found entertaining and traveling abroad added greatly to the cost of living, that one of her daughter's greatest incidental expenses was for hire of cabs going to and from social functions, and that a great deal of the social life which young ladies in New York see is where gentlemen are not invited, such as teas, receptions, etc.
