BIJOU THEATRE

George Walsh made a distinct hit last night at the Bijou Theatre, where he was shown in William Fox's latest comedy-drama. "This Is the Life." Of course, "Smiling George" always makes a "hit," but he is particularly pleasing in this picture, which has the added merit of having been directed by George's brother, R. A. Walsh, who made "The Honor System" "The Conqueror," "The In-In the beginning George is a champion ukulele player and motion picture fan, His father hopes to make him a business man and sends him off to South America with a cargo of munitions. On board is a count whose trade is that of starting revolutions. George thinks that this man is a motion picture manager. Also on board is a sweet young thing that George imagines is the "Queen of the Movies." He doesn't learn the true state of affairs until a South American Republic is ready to shoot him for aiding the count in revolution. He escapes and then rescues the lady from the count's clutches. He finds she is eally the daughter of an American consul. She finally comes to the belief that he is the grandest man in
