The late William Louis Winans died in 1897 worth $15,000,000. He born in New Jersey, where his father was domiciled. He never became naturalized in any other country, but after living in Russia went to reside in England in 1858. His estate came before the British courts in the shape of an information prepared for the crown by the Attorney-General with the cbject of recovering legacy duty on it. The particular claim was small, but the decision would involve millions. It was argued for the crown that Mr. Winans had acquired a domicile in England. He had marriel a British subject, had acquired very large property in Scotland and had leased a mansion at Kensington, London,
The defendants, Mr. Walter Winans and Mr. Louis W. Winans, sons of the deceased, argued, through counsel, that a rich man taking expensive houses in England for terrorest.
