The Claymore-Coriolanus Collision The collision between the steamer Claymore and the ship Coriolanus occurred last Monday four hundred miles west of Fastnet. The weather was clear, but a heavy sea was running. The Coriolanus was tacking and the Claymore attempted to cross her bows, but failed, and the Coriolanus struck her amidships, cutting into her engine room. The ship's bows were crushed to the keel, and her bowsprit and foremast were carried away. The crews of both vessels became panic stricken and rushed for the boats, which were immediately lowered. Many left the vessels without boots or coats. The steamer Queensmore, which was five miles distant, saw the collision and hastened to the rescue. She stood by the Claymore until she sank. The report that the Coriolanus also sank was errone ous, as she was seen by the steamer Britannic on Wednesday.
