

RECENT.

By HERBERT B. MERRICK. "It's only Bessie Raven," said Mrs. Liddington to her niece, Mrs. Enfield, a blooming city matron, who had brought her two boys to the country for the summer.

"There are no trout there! You might throw bait and wait a year, and you wouldn't get a bite!" "It was a deep, solitary ravine, where, in attitudes of intense eagerness, Hal Enfield and his brother Felix were holding their fishing rods, awaiting the expected bite, while Bessie Raven's brown face and big blue eyes looked out at them from a natural oval frame of bones and roses, as if she had a basket in one hand, and her tattered sun-bonnet in the other.

"I don't know that we asked any information from you," said he, haughtily. "Leave the goodness to be about your business." "I won't!" retorted Bessie Raven, with an ominous flash in her dark eyes. "It's a free country, ain't it? And I've as much right here as you have!" "Very well," said Hal, rising and gathering together his tackle. "I'll go, then. Come, Felix."

"Oh!" cried he, "where is my—?" "Where do you want to go?" asked Bessie Raven, with a look of scorn. "Just a piece further on. There's lots of 'em—only everybody don't know it. Come on!" "And the two children spent a long summer's morning together under the green trees. Until, just as Felix Enfield was turning to go, half apprehensive that he had missed the farm-house dinner, he perceived that the little gold cross he wore attached to his watch was gone.

"Why, how wonderfully lifelike," said Mr. Derris, gazing at a bumblebee which he had just seen. "If it were not for the fact that it is a bumblebee, and not a human being, I should think it was a garden flower. I swear it is a—G-r-e-e-n!" he suddenly shrieked, inserting a forefinger in his mouth and dancing around like a whirling dervish. "Why, the blessed thing is alive!"

"During the summer and fall people are liable to sudden attacks of bowel complaint, and with no prompt remedy or medical aid at hand, life may be in danger. Those whose experience has given them wisdom, always keep Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry at hand for prompt relief, and a physician is seldom required.

"How is it, Mr. Brown," said the mill-owner to the farmer, "that when I came to measure those five barrels of apples I bought from you, I found them short?" "Singular, very singular, for I put them up in some of your own barrels," said the farmer. "Well, perhaps I made a mistake. Fine weather, isn't it?"

"A Radical Change. The best radiator of foul humors of the blood is Burdock Blood Bitters. A few bottles produce a radical change for the better in health and beauty. It removes the blood taint of scrofula, that terrible disease so common in this country, and restores the system to its normal condition.

"So I will," confessed Bessie, laughing and blushing. "If he is still infatuated enough to persist in wanting me." "They were married within a month—a regular true-love match—and old Mrs. Liddington finds herself grand-aunt-in-law to 'only Bessie Raven!' "And really," says she, complacently, "I don't think Felix could have made a better match!"

"A Perfect Flood of Sunshine" will fill the heart of every suffering woman if she will only persist in the use of Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription." It will cure the most excruciating periodical pains, and relieve you of all irregularities and give healthy action. It will positively cure internal inflammation and ulceration, misplacement and all kindred disorders. Price reduced to one dollar. By druggists.

Among the curiosities at the museum of the postoffice department in Washington is one evidently intended for some gentleman who has sought the protection of Canadian laws. It is an ordinary shirt cuff, upon which is drawn in ink a skeleton of a fleshy man, grasping in his hands, pursued by half a hundred anxious creditors with bills in their hands. Above is the inscription: "Discovered after the departure of the Great West Express," and underneath the following: "Oh, what a blessing the railroad are!"
