

The Gloucester Street Convent celebrated Mendelssohn's one hundredth anniversary by a recital from the masterpiece of that sweet composer. The interpretations were not lacking in color and spirit. The appreciation of the compositions, the resumé of Mendelssohn's life, and the papers read by the pupils, satisfied, to say the least, the audience's high expectations.

Obituary.

The announcement of the death of the late Harry Devlin, on the 14th inst., brought to his former professors and fellow-students the greatest sorrow. He was the only child of Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Devlin, of 329 Besserer street. After attending Ottawa College for three years, he matriculated in 1907. Since then his health was such as prevented his return. He had a virtuous and genial disposition that can never be forgotten by those who knew him. Six of his former classmates carried his body to the grave. May he rest in peace.

We sympathize sincerely with Mr. and Mrs. Devlin in their sad bereavement.

We regret to hear of the death of Mr. Charles Bédard, the father of a former graduate, Albert Bédard, and grandfather of Come Coupal. For many years Mr. Bédard had practiced law in his native town, St. Rémi, till on the 14th January last he was called to his reward at the fine old age of 80. The Review extends its sincere sympathy to the bereaved family.

DEBATES.

There have been some excellent debates held this year under the auspices of the Debating Society, and everything seems to point to the probability that as many more of as high a standard will be enjoyed by the students before the close of the term.

On Friday, January 22, the subject of public libraries came under discussion, and proved a veritable drawing card. Messrs. D. Breen and S. Weir descanted on the drawbacks of the libraries, while Messrs. A. Fleming and J. Sammon presented, with ability
