EXPERIENCE.—It often happens that the more we see into a man, the less we admire him.

Words that are often used together become associated in the mind; and unless we resist the force of verbal association, we shall often say something different from what we mean.

Conscience is a terrible punishment to the villains who yet believe in a hereafter.

Many who find the day too long, think life too short; but short as life is, some find it long enough to outlive their characters, their constitutions and their estates.
