

The proverb says, "A rolling stone gathers no moss;" but far better a life of useful activity than one spent in simply accumulating and never distributing. If we were all old mossy stones, the great West would never have been settled.

