at almost the top level of the day, with net gains as follows: Wheat. 1½c to 1½c; corn, 1¾c to 1¾c; oats, 2¾c to 2¾c; provisions, 5c to 22½c.

At first wheat speculators were held in check by reports of showers northwest, but late messages said that what moisture had been supplied was insufficient to head off the drought damage. Excited buying, which was manifested in oats earlier, took equal hold of wheat and corn near the finish and the greatest buying force of the year quickly developed.

Export sales at the seaboard and at Kansas City added to the late buillishness in wheat and put a stop to realizing sales by which longs had caused a temporary setback. The outlook for a liberal movement of new wheat in the southwest formed the incentive that for a time made some holders willing to let go. Final attention centred chiefly on the idea that heavy general rains must come soon to prevent important lowering of the yield in the spring crop belt.

What might be called a speculative explosion occurred in corn, the market closing at the highest point of the season. An increase of nearly 3,000,000 bushels in the visible supply falled to check the axcited buying, the immediate basis of which was personal evidence, which Sunday tours had given to leading traders that the Illinois crop showed backward growth and poor color, with progress likely to be severely hindered unless generous rains came soon.

Sharp Rise in Oats.

Despite huge sales by receiving houses, oats advanced more rapidly than any other staple on the boards. Unfavorable crop advices from South Dakota as well as from Illinois brought about an overwhelming wave of purchasing that carried values upward almost in a vertical line.

Country houses were energetic in backing the opinion that the hot wave and Porcubines—

Country houses were energetic in backing the opinion that the hot wave and the absence of rain meant vital harm in the fields.

Provisions felt the effect of the grain bulge, tho there was an easy start because of weakness at the yards. The upturn resulted in considerable selling by the biggest owner of pork.

Market Notes.

The last of the 1178 head of distillery cattle, fed by the old established firm of John, and Jesse Dunn left the byres at the close of last week. The average weight of the steers was 1350 lbs., the weight of the bulls was slightly over 1600 lbs., per head. The statement made in The World at the time of the sale crediting Mr. Campbell, the buyer of Nelson Morris & Co., Chicago, with the words, "The best selected feeders he had seen put in the byres," is fully borne out by the above weights. The whole purchase have been sent to the London market, where the name of J. & J. Dunn fed cattle has an enviable reputation among the wholesale butchers. The firm state that last season the feeders they purchased were unusually healthy, a small proportion of the herd needing a change of feed. Anyone who has the impression that feeding distillery cattle is an easy proposition is sadly astray. In the first place a large money outlay is required, that is tied up for six months, daily careful supervision of the herd and not least, the business acumen to know just when to accept an offer of purchase. The World opines that the firm of J. & J. Dunn sold out the herd at the "top of the market," thereby securing a profit on their large outlay of capital: at the present time large numbers of distillery cattle in the United States are unsaleable by the owners at a profit, after deducting capital and cost of feeding.
