

scriptions. They should feel themselves under a solemn obligation to augment the Society's means of usefulness, by exerting themselves to increase the number of its Members; to make known its objects to those who are ignorant of them; to distribute the Society's Books and Tracts, as far as their means will admit, wherever they think they may be usefully bestowed; to inculcate religious principles and practice; to suffer, in short, no opportunity to pass of "Promoting Christian Knowledge," both by precept and example, within the sphere of their influence.

If these important duties be discharged with activity and zeal, the Committee cannot doubt that the Divine Blessing will crown their humble exertions with increasing success.

By order of the Committee,
