HELPFUL HINTS -BY- GOLFING STARS

WALTER HAGEN

FORCE, and force alone, can never take the place of rhythm and correct timing. I know any number of powerfully built men who can not drive a golf ball 200 yards to save their necks. They have been naturally endowed with strength but they have never learned the art of using it properly. One man in particular, a friend of mine of long standing, has been especially anxious to learn the game and it was a hopeless task, turned to, play in good form. I have given him lesson after lesson and, realizing that it was a hopeless task, turned him over to other pros, thinking that they could discover weaknesses and help him, but after a short time they, too, have given up. It is not that he is muscle bound. Some men are, I will admit, but this does not always prevent them from hitting a long ball if they learn to hit it scientifically. There are many little things which drive a very long ball and who apparently are using no great force at all. As a matter of fact force is applied to the shot but it is so evenly and beautifully distributed that it is hardly discernible.

LAURIE AYTON

THE only right way to play the iron is to take turf on every shot in which they are used. Doing this gives a player more control over the ball and increases the steadiness of his play. It also helps to get a back-swing on the ball when a club of the machine type is used. In playing from very hard ground, without taking turf before the shot, hitting hard ground with the club before the ball is struck will spoil the direction of the shot by turning the shaft in the player's hands and will rob the impact of the firmness and pep which it should have. After playing, it is a good practice to wipe the clubs free of any moisture which might cause them to warp. The shafts should be lightly oiled every week or so. Any fraying of the grip or binding threads should be tended to immediately by an expert. The best way to keep the clubs when not in use is to place them across a table, being sure the shafts are lying flat, with the heads over the edge of the table.

AUSTRALIA CARRIES SHARE OF DEFENCE

Naval Board Member Says Port Defences Inadequate, However

LONDON, June 24.—Australia is carrying a full share of the cost of imperial defence, considering her finances, Rear-Admiral Percival Hall-Thompson, for two years the first naval member of the Royal Australian naval board, declared prior to departure on his return to England, according to the Melbourne correspondent of the Daily Mail. Reviewing his experiences, Admiral Thompson declares that the standard of discipline in the Australian fleet is very high. He believes the two new cruisers now nearing completion, one in England and one in Australia, will be the finest afloat when they are finally added to the Australian navy. Admiral Thompson says the harbor defences at Sydney, Melbourne and other Australian ports are inadequate at present.
