this toundation or lining the material is nounted, the fulness at the shoulders, neckedges and waist being arranged in plaits. The closing is effected invisably at the left side, which finishes with a full outstanding ruffie. The neck is completed by a close standing band, with collar above made of lace and ribbons. The stylish sleeves have upper and under portions fitting the arm closely from wrists to shoulders, where the fulness is deftly arranged in a puff of moderate dimensions that is caught through the centre in butterfly effect. The waist is encircled by a ribbon girdle finishing at the left side with dainty bow tuted for a sash of mousseline or gauze, if preferred. The skirt consists of a foundainterlining of crinoline to the depth of six nches and a narrow dust ruffle of silk with lace ruffle as a foot decoration. The upper or sun-plaited skirt is cut in a complete circle, and if made of extra wide material, will have but one seam at the centre-back where the placket opening is finished. If cut in narrower or silk width the skirt must be seamed, care being taken to place the pattern correctly on the material according to the instructions given on our label. The plaiting must be done at as plaiting establishment by machines made expecially for this purpose before the bottom of the skirt is finished. Then it is mounted
