

ress is in the air, and, in proverbial phraseology, "We must take the season when it serves or lose our venture." Our natural resources are enormous—wheat, cattle, forest products, horses, minerals and men. We are bound by loyalty and affection more closely than most people imagine to the Mother Country, and all are inspired by that laudable ambition of seeing a solid and impregnable British Empire.

The following references to the Nino Mine is made in the Toronto Globe of July 4, 1900:
